Notwithstanding that the verdict or finding of a jury ordinarily is conclusive on appeal, the action of the jury is broadly subject to control of the appellate court,[87.60] and the power of the jury to render verdicts transgressing well-established principles of law must be limited.[87.65] Accordingly, where the evidence in a case, or on a material point, is undisputed, its legal effect presents a question of law and not of fact, and the verdict is subject to review,[88] and the conclusion therein reached may be set aside if against the evidence.[89] So it is

Other statements of rule

(1) While it is the duty of the trial court and of the supreme court to sustain the verdict of the jury, where there is a controversy as to the facts, it is equally the duty of both courts to declare the law on undisputed facts.
Wis.—Twist v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 190 N.W. 449, 178 Wis. 513.

(2) The reviewing court cannot say as a matter of law that one upon whom the burden of proof rests has discharged it merely because the testimony he offered was not contradicted.
Md.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stallings, 170 A. 163, 165 Md. 615.

Mixed questions of law and fact

The appellate court, in a decision of mixed questions of law and fact, is not precluded from reaching a different conclusion from that of the trial court as to ultimate fact, because there is no contradiction in the testimony.
Ill.—Shannon v. Nightingale, 151 N. E. 573, 321 Ill. 168.

In nature of demurrer to evidence

Verdict may not be set aside, as contrary to the evidence, unless it is plainly so, or without evidence to support it, and in determining that question the case must be viewed as on a demurrer to the evidence, unless that rule would work an injustice.
Va.—Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. T. W. Thayer Co., 119 S.E. 107, 137 Va. 294.

Where motion for new trial complains of verdict as against evidence, the court will review the sufficiency of the evidence as a whole in the light of the verdict.

for the reviewing court to decide whether there is any evidence in support of the verdict,[90] and where there is no legal or competent evidence in support of a verdict, the reviewing court will set it aside.[91] The rule that a verdict will not be disturbed where the evidence tends to support it does not embrace a case where a verdict has been rendered in favor of plaintiff in an action and the record shows an entire absence of evidence supporting, or tending to support, some material and indispensable fact neces-

4 C.J. p 856 note 88 [e].

What constitutes

A verdict is based on speculation when, after considering all the evidence favorable to plaintiff together with all inferences to be reasonably drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence favorable to the defendant, all unprejudiced minds must agree, from the facts and circumstances in evidence, that any one of several conclusions consistent with nonliability of defendant may as reasonably be drawn therefrom as is the conclusion of liability under plaintiff's theory of the case.

Mo.—Peak v. Judd, App., 278 S.W. 1044.

Okl.—Hepner v. Quapaw Gas Co., 217 P. 438, 92 Okl. 9.

Sound basis

The decision reached by triers of facts must have a sound basis and be arrived at by a logical process in order to be accepted as final in a last court of resort.

Me.—Arnst v. Estes, 8 A.2d 201, 136 Me. 272.

Probability

A verdict, although treated with great respect, has no force to convert a possibility into a probability.

Miss.—Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Skaggs, 179 So. 274, 181 Miss. 150.

Negligence

Reviewing court cannot permit the jury to guess on question of negligence of defendant, although legitimate inferences may be drawn from the established facts.

More than one cause of accident

(1) A verdict for damages cannot be sustained in a malpractice action, where the proof disclosed that one of several causes might have produced the result complained of.

§ 1648. On Conflicting Evidence

a. In general
b. Limitations of rule

a. In General

Generally, the responsibility of determining disputed questions of fact rests with the jury, and not with the reviewing court, and a verdict based on conflicting evidence will not ordinarily be disturbed by the appellate court.

As a general rule, the responsibility of determining disputed questions of fact rests with the jury, and not with the reviewing court,[14.50] and it is not

4 C.J. p 857 note 99.

Physical facts considered

The reviewing court, in determining sufficiency of evidence to warrant a verdict for plaintiff, although considering evidence in light most favorable to plaintiff, could not ignore undisputed physical facts shown by the record, or accept the testimony of plaintiff which was inconsistent with such physical facts.
Vt.—Hastings v. Murray, 20 A.2d 107, 112 Vt. 37—Craig v. Parkhurst, 18 A.2d 173, 111 Vt. 486.

Contrary to laws of nature or the like

Only where the facts proved in evidence are contrary to some well-known law of nature, mathematics, or the like, is it demonstrated beyond controversy that the verdict is based on what is untrue, and cannot be true; in such cases the court will declare as matter of law that the testimony is not legally sufficient to warrant the verdict.

Inconsistencies in plaintiff's testimony did not bring the case within the rule that a verdict based on testimony inherently improbable may be set aside.
Mo.—Shannon v. People's Motorbus Co. of St. Louis, App., 20 S.W.2d 580.

Physical impossibility not necessary

The supreme court's authority to reverse a case for insufficiency of evidence is not limited to cases where evidence supporting the verdict is conceded to be a physical impossibility.
Ariz.—Inter-State Fidelity Building & Loan Ass'n v. Hollis, 17 P.2d 1101, 41 Ariz. 295.

Evidence not improbable

Testimony in an action for injuries resulting from a collision was held not so inherently improbable as to require reversal.

(3) Where reasonable minds viewing the evidence in a case dispassionately may fairly entertain a difference of opinion on it, the conflict in the evidence is substantial and the verdict will not be disturbed on appeal.

Cal.—Christopher v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

Evidence not supplied by verdict

While the jury's verdict for plaintiff resolves all questions on conflicting evidence in favor of plaintiff, it does not supply the evidence.

S.D.—Pyne v. Risager, 203 N.W. 994, 48 S.D. 265.

Expert testimony

A verdict on conflicting evidence of experts, where there are no controlling inconsistent facts or circumstances, will not be disturbed.

Tex.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Joiner, Civ.App., 178 S.W. 806.

4 C.J. p 858 note 3 [b].

Failure of prevailing party to call witness presumably favorable to him does not require reversal of judgment based on conflicting evidence and inferences therefrom.

Idaho.—Gem State Sales Co. v. Rudin Bros., 41 P.2d 614, 55 Idaho 299.

Implied finding of the jury from conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

Cal.—Caine v. Briscoe, 248 P. 774, 78 C.A. 660—Butler v. Cornell, 243 P. 701, 75 C.A. 692.

Presumption will raise a conflict sufficient to support a finding made in accordance therewith, even though there is evidence to the contrary.

Cal.—Grantham v. Ordway, 182 P. 73, 40 C.A. 758.

Prima facie case

If plaintiff made out a prima facie case and there was a conflict in the evidence, the jury's finding for plaintiff is conclusive.

Iowa.—Crozier v. U. S. Railroad Administration, 181 N.W. 695.

Verdict against one on whom burden of proof rested cannot be disturbed by the appellate court where evidence is conflicting.

Ark.—Smith v. Continental Casualty Co., 29 S.W.2d 279, 181 Ark. 1072.

No motion for new trial

Where the evidence was in conflict and no motion for new trial was made in the trial court, the verdict supported by a scintilla of evidence could not be disturbed on appeal.

a "conflict" preventing the disturbance of a verdict on appeal, must present a fair and reasonable ground for a difference of opinion,[19.5] and in determining whether there is a conflict in the evidence, a mere conflict in words is not sufficient, but, with respect to appellate review, the contrary evidence must be of a substantial character such as reasonably supports the judgment as applied to the peculiar facts of the case.[19.10]

The general rule as to the power of an appellate court to review a verdict or findings based on conflicting evidence has been stated in numerous different forms.[19.15] So the rule has been enunciated that the finding or verdict of a jury, on conflicting evidence, ordinarily is conclusive on appeal,[19.20] that it is the function or duty of the jury, and not the appellate court, to weigh conflicting evidence,[19.25] that conflicts in the evidence are addressed to the Fair presumption of truth

Evidence to be sufficient to support a verdict must be reasonable and so consistent with the circumstances and probabilities as to raise a fair presumption of its truth, and a mere contradiction in the testimony of two witnesses is insufficient to constitute a conflict of evidence.

Me.—Hall v. Cumberland County Power & Light Co., 123 A. 418, 123 Me. 202.

Substantial conflict

Where reasonable minds viewing evidence in case dispassionately may fairly entertain difference of opinion on it, conflict in evidence is substantial and verdict will not be disturbed on appeal.

Similar statements of rule
(1) The appellate court decides sufficiency of evidence and not its conflicting character.

Colo.—Takamine v. Hirschfeld, 256 P. 313, 81 Colo. 501.
(2) Where there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether defendant instituted the prosecution of plaintiff after full statement of facts to counsel, the only issue in error proceeding is whether judgment for plaintiff is against the weight of evidence.

Ohio.—Frost v. O'Kross, 153 N.E. 879, 22 Ohio App. 174.

Finding as against weight of evidence
Although bound by a jury verdict or finding of fact upon conflicting evidence and prohibited from disturbing it on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, the appellate court has jurisdiction, in their conclusion of fact, to determine whether or not such a finding or verdict is against the weight of the evidence, and for that reason not adopted.

Limits of appellate court's power

When the verdict is attacked for insufficiency of evidence, the supreme court's power begins and ends with inquiry whether substantial evidence contradicted or uncontradicted, in and of itself, supports the verdict, and, if conflicting on any material point, the jury are assumed to have resolved the conflict in favor of the prevailing party.

Cal.—Treadwell v. Nickel, 228 P. 25, 194 C. 243.

Unless there is no substantial evidence sustaining the verdict, the appellate court cannot set it aside.

that the verdict is against the preponderance of the evidence, will not warrant the setting aside of a verdict based on conflicting evidence.[28]

Where the evidence is fairly evenly balanced, or would warrant a verdict for either party, the reviewing court will not set aside a verdict based on conflicting evidence.[29]

Unless reasonable minds could not reasonably have reached a verdict, based on conflicting evidence, it is conclusive on the appellate court.[30]

Distinguished from rule in trial court
The rule that, where the evidence of payment is equally balanced, plaintiff is entitled to recover is a proper instruction to give the jury, but is inapplicable on appeal, the rule then being that on conflicting evidence the verdict of the jury on the issue of payment will not be disturbed.

Prejudice, partiality, or misconduct. The reviewing court will not disturb a verdict based on conflicting evidence where there is nothing to show that the verdict was the result of prejudice, partiality, or misconduct on the part of the jury.[31]

Where honest difference of opinion possible. Where the evidence as to the existence of the facts in issue is conflicting and of such a character that fair-minded men might honestly differ as to the result thereof, the verdict of the jury is conclusive on appeal.[32]

Unless clearly wrong, or flagrantly against the weight of the evidence, a verdict based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.[33] A

Fact not opinion

Where the evidence conflicts, the reviewing court can reverse only when, as a matter of law and not as a matter of the court's opinion, judgment is against the weight of the evidence.

Ohio.—Twin Dry Cell Battery Co. v. W. P. Southworth Co., 154 N.E. 58, 22 Ohio App. 450.

Unless clearly against right and justice, a verdict upon conflicting evidence will not be set aside.

W.Va.—Dunn v. Prindle, 94 S.E. 28, 81 W.Va. 123.

What constitutes

The court of appeals will not reverse judgment as flagrantly against the evidence, unless testimony for the unsuccessful party, together with the circumstances, overturns a prima facie case, or the evidence of the successful party is impaired by impeachment.

Application of rule to particular actions and issues. The general rule that the verdict or findings of a jury based on conflicting evidence ordinarily will not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly wrong, or manifestly against the weight of the evidence, has been applied in actions ex contractu generally,[36.5] in actions involving insurance policies,[36.10] and in actions in tort;[36.15] and the rule applies as to find-

Augmentation of injury

The rule that the verdict of the jury on conflicting evidence concerning alleged negligence is conclusive applies even though the conflict is confined to the question of defendant's responsibility for the augmentation of plaintiff's injury, it appearing from the evidence that in other respects defendant was without fault.

stantial conflict in the evidence, notwithstanding the general rule that a verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.[36.80] So it has been held that the reviewing court will nevertheless reverse a verdict on conflicting evidence where the evidence overwhelmingly preponderates against the verdict,[37] where not reasonably supported by evidence,[38] where the evidence in support of the verdict is in itself incredible,[39] or where the verdict is unexplainable on any possible hypothesis.[40] Also, the general rule has no application where there is no conflict of the evidence in any essential particular;[41] nor has the rule any application unless the conflict is real and substantial,[42] not fanciful or fictitious nor mere pretense,[43] mere conclusions not serving to meet the definition of substantial or any evidence as against positive direct evidence of a fact.[44] It is not sufficient that there is some evidence supporting the verdict if it is so weak and inconclusive as not to raise a substantial conflict with that produced against it;[45] nor is it sufficient that the conflict should be in respect of some matter or question which, on all the proof, is shown to be immaterial,[46] or not to be the controlling question which governs the right of recovery.[47]

§ 1649. Against Weight of Evidence

An appellate court generally will not weigh the evidence on which the verdict of the trial court is based, and it will not disturb the verdict as against the weight of the evidence unless it is clearly and manifestly contrary to the weight of evidence.

It is generally neither the duty nor the right of a reviewing court to weigh the evidence or consider its weight,[48] and a verdict based on the weight of the 52 C.J. p 174 note 14.

Function of trial court

(1) The granting of a new trial inter alia because the verdict is against the weight of evidence is a function of the trial court.

Pa.—Weiss v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., Limited, of London, 132 A. 120, 285 Pa. 251.

(2) The failure of trial court to perform its duty and set aside a verdict where the preponderance of the evidence is contrary to it does not authorize usurpation of such duty by appellate court.

Ark.—Missouri Pacific Transp. Co. v. Sharp, 108 S.W.2d 579, 194 Ark. 405.

Assignment going only to the weight or preponderance of evidence could not be considered by the court of appeals on an appeal in error.

Tenn.—Duncan v. Mahaffa, 177 S.W. 2d 28, 26 Tenn.App. 696—Wilson v. Moudy, 123 S.W.2d 828, 22 Tenn. App. 356—Atlantic Ice & Coal Co. v. Cameron, 94 S.W.2d 72, 19 Tenn. App. 675—Nashville Gas & Heating Co. v. Phillips, 69 S.W.2d 914, 17 Tenn.App. 648—Hager v. Hager, 66 S.W.2d 250, 17 Tenn.App. 143—Bealafelt v. Hicks, 13 Tenn.App. 18—Adamant Stone & Roofing Co. v. Vaughn, 7 Tenn.App. 170.

Tex.—San Antonio Public Service Co. v. Fraser, Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 232.

Effect of evidence

Where the evidence in all material ways points in the same direction, and the question is not its truth or weight, but its effect, the jury's verdict is not binding on the supreme court.

Ariz.—U. S. Smelting, Refining & Mining Exploration Co. v. Wallapai Mining & Development Co., 230 P. 1109, 27 Ariz. 126.

If the conclusion is dependent on the weight of the testimony, the verdict of the jury is final and conclusive on the appellate court.

Va.—Wilkins v. Davis, 164 S.E. 649, 158 Va. 763.

Probative force of testimony may not be rejudged by the reviewing court.

Ky.—Lawson's Adm'r v. Brandenburg, 41 S.W.2d 201, 240 Ky. 68—Rader v. Goe, 39 S.W.2d 486, 239 Ky. 288.

Probability of evidence for jury

(1) The court of appeals could not sustain a contention in a law case that evidence was unbelievable because of the improbability of its truth and opposing evidence showing its physical impossibility, since the matter of determining the credibility of witnesses and resolving disputed questions of fact was for the jury.

Mo.—Lawson v. East St. Louis Ry. Co., App., 76 S.W.2d 454.

(2) Testimony wholly at variance with physical facts and inherently unbelievable and impossible cannot be considered by a reviewing court.

Mo.—Lawson v. East St. Louis Ry. Co., supra.

Sufficiency of evidence

(1) There is a material difference between a question presented, as to whether the evidence was sufficient to raise the issue for the jury, and a question not presented, as to whether the verdict is so against weight of evidence as to be clearly wrong, but the appellate court can determine only the former.

Tex.—Houston Printing Co. v. Jones, Civ.App., 282 S.W. 854.

(2) Where sufficiency of evidence to support verdict is raised appellate court will not reverse unless evidence preponderates in opposite direction.

Mich.—Winslow v. Veterans of Foreign Wars National Home, 44 N.W.2d 19, 328 Mich. 488.

What constitutes a preponderance of the evidence is ordinarily a question for the jury.

Ark.—Bockman v. World Ins. Co., 268 S.W.2d 1, 223 Ark. 665—Ball v. Independence County, 217 S.W.2d 913, 214 Ark. 694.

Tex.—Fagg v. Benners, Civ.App., 47 S.W.2d 872.

Where disputed issues of fact appear, the evidence leaves the conclusion for the jury and does not pre-evidence ordinarily will be regarded as conclusive, or will not be disturbed.[48.5] The only concern of the appellate court when a verdict or finding is attacked as being contrary to the weight of the evidence is whether the evidence supports the verdict or finding,[48.10] and a reviewing court may not interfere with a verdict merely because it appears to be against the weight or preponderance of the evidence.[49] sent a case of a verdict plainly and palpably contrary to the preponderance of proof.

Ala.—O'Neal v. Turner, 158 So. 801, 230 Ala. 24.

Where the evidence makes an issue for the jury, the appellate court has no concern with the question of the weight of the evidence.

Mo.—Conner v. Neiswender, 232 S.W. 2d 469, 360 Mo. 1074.

Brummer v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., App., 59 S.W.2d 781.

Pa.—Teel v. Erie Coach Co., Com.Pl., 21 Erie Co. 82.

Tex.—Crook v. Studdard, Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 1068.

Raised by rule to show cause

(1) Question as to whether verdict is contrary to weight of evidence can be raised only on rule to show cause.

N.J.—Condra v. New Jersey & S. I. Ferry Co., 154 A. 748, 9 N.J.Misc. 529.

(2) An objection that the verdict is against the weight of evidence is cognizable only on a rule to show cause in the trial court.

N.J.—Ratz v. Hillside Bus Owners' Ass'n, 135 A. 884, 103 N.J.Law 502.

Where cross complaints were interposed by defendant in personal injury action, appellate court would be required to weigh factual delinquencies of the parties involved.

Substantial evidence to the contrary

Where verdict is supported by substantial evidence, appellate court cannot declare it to be against the manifest weight of the evidence merely because there is substantial evidence to the contrary, unless such evidence to the contrary palpably outweighs the evidence in support of verdict.

Where evidence not clear and convincing

The reviewing court is not justified in disregarding jury's fact finding, supported by substantial evidence, on ground that evidence is not clear and convincing.

That the ends of justice will be subserved is not a ground warranting the appellate court in ordering a new trial and letting a second jury pass on the evidence, unless a clear affirmative showing is made that the verdict is wrong.

Fla.—Motor Transit Co. v. Driver, 162 So. 883, 120 Fla. 293.

Effect of determination

Determination on review of all the evidence that certain findings of the jury were not so contrary to the evidence as to be clearly wrong includes determination that there was evidence sufficient to require submission of the issues on which the findings were made.

Similar statements of rule

(1) To hold that a verdict for plaintiff is against the great weight of evidence, the supreme court must be satisfied that defendants' testimony overwhelmingly outweighed plaintiff's testimony.

Mich.—Michaels v. Smith, 216 N.W. 413, 240 Mich. 671.

(2) The appellate court may not interfere with the verdict unless it is clearly and palpably against the weight of the evidence, and, to be so, it must appear at first blush after the reading of the evidence to be grossly and irreconcilably contrary to the weight thereof.

Ky.—McNeill v. Choate, 237 S.W. 1082, 194 Ky. 56.

Fact that appellate court would reach a different conclusion is not criterion for determining whether the verdict was contrary to the evidence, but whether or not the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict is controlling factor.

Ark.—Lloyd v. James, 128 S.W.2d 1019, 198 Ark. 255.

Tex.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Hellen, Civ.App., 47 S.W.2d 1112.

In reaching the conclusion that a verdict is not flagrantly against the evidence, the appellate court need not say that it is sustained by the weight of the evidence, but only that it is not palpably against the evidence.

Ky.—Hostetter v. Green, 185 S.W. 511, 170 Ky. 119.

trary to the manifest weight of the evidence,[53.5] | unless the evidence is so conclusive that reasonable

More contradiction of testimony for the successful party by a greater number of witnesses does not render the verdict contrary to the evidence.

Ky.—Bryson v. Raum's Adm'r, 47 S.W.2d 927, 243 Ky. 121.

Unsatisfactory evidence

A verdict will not be disturbed as being against the manifest weight of the evidence because the testimony of the principal witness is somewhat unsatisfactory to the reviewing court.

Ohio.—Union Bus Station v. Etosh, 192 N.E. 743, 48 Ohio App. 161.

Physical facts

(1) While the appellate court may not weigh the evidence it should use its judicial knowledge so as to bring about justice, and for that purpose may apply to the undisputed physical facts the well-known laws of nature and mathematics.

Pa.—Lessig v. Reading Transit & Light Co., 113 A. 381, 270 Pa. 266.

(2) Before a judgment can be reversed because physical facts do not warrant it, it must be impossible for the alleged results shown to have followed.

What constitutes

To set a verdict aside as against the weight of evidence, the evidence must raise the inference that the verdict resulted from mistake, passion, or prejudice.

N.J.—Palumbo v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 159 A. 322, 10 N.J.Misc. 204.

Disregard of, or refusal to accept, material or uncontradicted testimony

(1) Jury's disregard of material testimony which, if considered and given due weight, would require different verdict, requires grant of new trial.

Neb.—Platte Valley Bank v. Franta, 300 N.W. 347, 140 Neb. 453—Davis v. Security Ins. Co., 298 N.W. 687, 139 Neb. 730—Cuva v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. of Glens Falls, N. Y., 285 N.W. 917, 136 Neb. 359—Peterson v. Omaha & Council Bluffs St. Ry. Co., 269 N.W. 510, 131 Neb. 676.

(2) Although a jury is not required to accept as true evidence of a witness merely because there is no direct evidence to contradict it, appellate court will not permit a jury to act in an arbitrary manner in refusing to accept uncontradicted testimony.

Kan.—Reeves v. Child, 194 P.2d 919, 165 Kan. 341.

(3) A verdict for plaintiff in a malicious prosecution action cannot stand, where there is credible uncontradicted testimony that the facts before defendant reasonably warranted the conclusion that plaintiff was guilty of the offense charged.

Ga.—South Georgia Grocery Co. v. Banks, Ga.App., 182 S.E. 61, 52 Ga.App. 1.

(4) Reversal of judgment for injuries sustained by infant when struck by an automobile while crossing street was required where uncontradicted testimony showed that infant was guilty of contributory negligence.

N.Y.—Atkinson v. Dickerman, 13 N. Y.S.2d 570, 257 App.Div. 986.

Verdicts set aside or reversed

(1) A verdict is to be given great weight but will be reversed where the evidence on one side is cogent and strong and given by unimpeached and disinterested witnesses, and that on the other side is weak and improbable or given by interested witnesses, or witnesses whose credibility has been impeached.

Miss.—Universal Truck Loading Co. v. Taylor, 164 So. 3, 174 Miss. 353.

(2) The party holding the affirmative is required to prove his case by a preponderance of all the evidence and if evidence does not preponderate in his favor or is evenly balanced a verdict in his favor must be reversed.

Ill.—Bishop v. Nikolas, 51 N.E.2d 828, 320 Ill.App. 681.

A verdict supported only by a scintilla of evidence may be so flagrantly against the evidence as to require reversal.

Ky.—Murphy's Ex'r v. Bryan, 18 S. W.2d 978, 230 Ky. 244.

Evidence sufficient to go to jury

(1) Where evidence is sufficient to take case to jury, judgment will not be reversed and new trial granted on ground that verdict is palpably and flagrantly against the evidence.

Ky.—Clemens v. Richards, 200 S.W. 2d 156, 304 Ky. 154.

(2) It has been held, however, that even though the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury the court of appeals may set aside the judgment as against the evidence.

Ky.—Grubb v. Coleman Fuel Co., 114 S.W.2d 477, 272 Ky. 847.

Tex.—Long v. Crutchfield, Civ.App., 295 S.W. 625.

Similar statements of rule

(1) The finding of the jury will be set aside if based on testimony which cannot be true, on any reasonable hypothesis, considering the circumstances and uncontroverted physical facts.

Tex.—San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Biggs, Civ.App., 283 S.W. 627.

(2) Where the overwhelming weight of evidence and physical circumstances showed that the verdict was wrong and should have been set aside, the appellate court must do what the trial court should have done, notwithstanding some evidence supporting the verdict would prevent a directed verdict.

Ala.—Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Donaldson, 156 So. 859, 26 Ala.App. 179, certiorari denied 156 So. 865, 229 Ala. 276.

Actions in trespass

The rule that a verdict cannot stand when against the "incontrovertible physical facts" is customarily applied in actions in trespass where the testimony of a plaintiff or in his behalf would carry the case to the jury if it was not completely discredited by some physical fact introduced into the case with mathematical certainty or open to visual inspection or both, and the rule is invoked successfully only in support of a challenge to plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence.

Beyond reasonable doubt

To justify the court in rescinding a verdict on ground that evidence supporting it is incredible, undisputed physical facts must demon-

consider the weight of the testimony, or disturb a verdict founded therein, it may set aside the verdict where there is a total lack of proof to sustain it,[57] where the evidence is legally insufficient to support the verdict,[58] where there is a strong preponderance of evidence over that on which the verdict is based, and it appears that injustice has been done[59] or where the manifest injustice thereof shows mistake,[60] prejudice, sympathy, corruption, or other improper motive on the part of the jury,[61] or where the verdict is so contrary to the weight of the evidence as to shock the ordinary fair minded person.[62] The power of a court of review to set aside a verdict as against the weight of the evidence must be exercised judiciously, and only under circumstances where the interests of justice demand it.[62.5]

§ 1650. Amount of Recovery

Generally, a finding by a jury of value or of the amount of damages will not be disturbed by a reviewing

4 C.J. p 869 note 96.

Court cannot constitute itself as a jury to determine the jury's method of arriving at a particular amount of damages to be awarded.

N.J.—Dunn v. Parker & Graham, 159 A. 613, 10 N.J.Misc. 492.

Tex.—Brewer v. Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co., Civ.App., 247 S.W.2d 435.

Jury award has great weight

The jury's award of damages, while not binding on the appellate court, must have great weight with it.

Ill.—Roedler v. Vandalia Bus Lines, 281 Ill.App. 520.

Mo.—Mabe v. Gille Mfg. Co., 271 S.W. 1023, 219 Mo.App. 234.

Wash.—Kramer v. Portland-Seattle Auto Freight, Inc., 261 P.2d 692, 43 Wash.2d 386.

Only question for review relative to the amount of the verdict is whether the amount is within the bounds of reason and reasonably proportionate to the injuries proved.

Mo.—O'Brien v. Rindskopf, 70 S.W. 2d 1085, 334 Mo. 1233.

Mathematical precision in proof lacking

Where a verdict is rendered on the evidence of experts as to value, the court will not set aside or reverse because the amount of the verdict cannot be demonstrated by the testimony of any single witness with mathematical precision.

Fla.—American Mfg. Co. v. A. H. McLeod & Co., 82 So. 802, 78 Fla. 162.

Failure to deliver telegram

(1) Amount of award for damages for failure to deliver telegram rests primarily with jury, but amount of award is not free from control or decision by either trial court or appellate court.

Tex.—W. U. Tel. Co. v. Hinson, Civ. App., 222 S.W.2d 636, error refused no reversible error.

(2) The amount of damages to be awarded one to whom a telegraph company negligently fails to deliver a telegram notifying him of the sickness of his father is a question peculiarly addressed to the sound and impartial judgment of the jury, and the appellate courts are reluctant to disturb the verdict of the jury as to the amount that should be awarded.

Tex.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Goodson, Civ.App., 217 S.W. 183, error refused.

Tort action

Question of damages for tort, especially libel or slander, is peculiarly within jury's province and court rarely interferes with jury's verdict, unless damages awarded are so unconscionable as to impress court with verdict's injustice and thereby induce belief that jurors were actuated by prejudice, partiality or corruption, but such rule is not applicable to actions ex contractu, nor to actions ex delicto, where damages may be measured with some degree of certainty.

Mo.—Coats v. News Corp., 197 S.W. 2d 958, 355 Mo. 778.

Personal injury cases

(1) The amount of damages for a personal injury is for the determination of the jury, and it is only with the greatest reluctance that courts will substitute their own judgment for that of the jury.

Neb.—Curran v. Union Stockyards Co. of Omaha, 196 N.W. 135, 111 Neb. 251.

(2) It is for the jury, not the appellate court, to compare plaintiff's contributory negligence with that of defendant and, after ascertaining the full amount of his damages, to award such proportional part thereof as the negligence attributable to defendant bore to the entire negligence attributable to both.

Ky.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Goode, 183 S.W. 264, 169 Ky. 102—Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 171 S.W. 451, 161 Ky. 814.

(3) Damages, resulting from injuries which practically close the door of opportunity in the vocation for which by nature an injured person is best fitted, rest largely in the discretion of the jury, there being no definite standard by which such damages may be measured.

Wis.—Bassett v. Milwaukee Northern Ry. Co., 170 N.W. 944, 169 Wis. 152.

(4) The amount of recovery in an action for personal injuries, within the bounds of reason, is for the determination of the jury in the trial court.

Ala.—Hilley v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 66 So. 883, 11 Ala.App. 605.

Colo.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Gill, 153 P. 762, 60 Colo. 417.

Mo.—Winston v. Lusk, 172 S.W. 76, 186 Mo.App. 381.

Tex.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Dickens, Civ.App., 170 S.W. 835.

(5) The amount of the verdict in a personal injury action, while inexplicable to the supreme court, was nevertheless within the jury's province.

Wash.—Crowe v. O'Rourke, 262 P. 136, 146 Wash. 74.

(6) The law prescribes no exact standard by which the compensation to be awarded for personal injuries shall be awarded. Full compensation is impossible in the abstract, and different individuals will vary in their estimate of the sum which will be a just pecuniary compensation. Therefore, the appellate court will not attempt to substitute its judgment for that of the jury.

Tenn.—Saucier v. Roberts, 2 Tenn. App. 211.

(7) The amount of recovery found by the jury in any case, and particularly one for personal injuries, is reviewed with reluctance.

Ariz.—Arizona Cotton Oil Co. v. Thompson, 245 P. 673, 30 Ariz. 204.

Ill.—Gorczynski v. Nugent, 80 N.E. 2d 418, 335 Ill.App. 63, affirmed 83 N.E.2d 495, 402 Ill. 147.

W.Va.—Watson v. Woodall, 61 S.E.2d 747, 134 W.Va. 787.

(8) A verdict of fifteen thousand dollars for personal injuries will not be disturbed, when it was deliberate judgment of the jury.

Wash.—Gillum v. Pacific Coast R. Co., 279 P. 114, 152 Wash. 657.

(9) Compensatory damages must not rest on conjecture or uncertainty, even though the determination of a jury as to the amount of unliquidated damages for personal injuries is entitled to great weight and is not lightly to be disturbed.

Ill.—Roedler v. Vandalia Bus Lines, 281 Ill.App. 520.

submitted under proper instructions.[64] The question of damages is committed first to the discretion of the jury and then to the trial court,[64.5] and it has been held that the exercise of discretion by the jury in

On motion for new trial

(1) The reasonableness of a verdict is a question for the trial court under all the evidence on the motion for a new trial.

Contillo v. City of Pittsburgh, 45 A.2d 366, 158 Pa.Super. 524.

(2) Rules of law governing jury's right to fix damages originally, appellate court's right to grant new trial on ground that verdict is excessive or inadequate, and trial judge's right to grant new trial on ground that verdict is unfair, unjust, contrary to evidence, excessive, or too small, exist apart from, and independently of, each other.

Ga.—Brown v. Service Coach Lines, 31 S.E.2d 236, 71 Ga.App. 437.

(3) Where trial court has ruled on amount of verdict in hearing on a motion for new trial, such ruling amounts to ruling on weight of evidence, and on review the supreme court will look to see whether evidence, viewed in light most favorable to ruling, affords reasonable and substantial support of the ruling, and if it does the ruling must be sustained.

Mo.—Roderick v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co., 299 S.W.2d 422.

It is the duty of the trial justice to examine the evidence and weight thereof on issue of damages with as this respect will not be reviewed in the absence of clear abuse.[64.10] As otherwise expressed, the appellate court will not interfere with the award of the jury unless it is palpably without support in the evidence presented at the trial,[65] unless the jury have departed for some reason from the legal measure of damages,[66] or unless the verdict is so palpably excessive or grossly inadequate[67] as to indicate much care as is ordinarily given to the question of liability, and hence where trial justice sustained jury's award merely because jury heard testimony as to what deceased did with his money, such duty was not satisfied.

Damages commensurate with injuries

The jury which found defendant liable for plaintiff's injuries had the duty to award plaintiff damages reasonably commensurate with the nature and extent of the injuries, and, where the jury failed to do so, the reviewing court was required to interfere, regardless of whether the damages awarded were inadequate or excessive.

In determining the reasonableness of the verdict for damages, the appellate court should consider the purchasing value of money at the time of the trial.

Mo.—Sachse v. Highland Dairy Farms Co., App., 45 S.W.2d 934.

Instruction as law of case

The supreme court, in reviewing evidence to support the verdict in the amount rendered, must consider the evidence in the light of the instruction on damages, since the law governing the measure of damages in the case is settled by the instruction to which no exception was taken.

S.D.—Robertson v. Hall, 255 N.W. 803, 62 S.D. 599.

Recovery considered in light of evidence

The appellate court, when the question as to the amount of damages is saved by proper assignments, must consider recovery in the light of the evidence.

case as on the reduced amount.[32] Hence, where a remittitur for part of the recovery is entered in the lower court, a judgment for the balance will of course be upheld by the appellate court where it would have sustained a verdict for the full amount.[33]

So also, where the court directs a remittitur for part of the verdict, or a remittitur for part thereof is entered with plaintiff's consent, a reviewing court will uphold a judgment for the balance if there is evidence sustaining it,[34] even though the amount defendant was not required to determine whether there was such alleged excessiveness in the fifteen thousand dollars award, but only whether evidence supported the ten thousand five hundred dollars finally allowed.

(2) Judgment of the trial court, which on motion for new trial for excessiveness of verdict required plaintiff to reduce the verdict or submit to a new trial, has material influence with the supreme court in determining whether the verdict was excessive.

(4) In reviewing assignment of error that damages awarded were grossly excessive, reviewing court does not weigh the evidence but examines the record to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support trial court's ruling, and if the evidence, viewed in light most favorable to ruling, affords reasonable and substantial support thereof, ruling must be sustained.

as reduced seems large,[35] if it is not clearly excessive.[36]

If, however, it is apparent to the appellate court that the verdict is the result of prejudice or passion or other improper influence, a remittitur will not remove the taint of the vice,[37] and a remittitur

Absence abuse of discretion

Where the trial court orders a remittitur, the appellate court will not further reduce the verdict, except on a clear showing of abuse of the court's discretion.

Mo.—Stelmach v. Saul, App., 50 S.W. 2d 721.

Effect of statute

Prior to the adoption of a statute relating to remittitur, the acceptance of a remittitur was a binding election on the part of plaintiff; the statute only affects those cases where the remittitur is made on account of passion or prejudice of the jury and hence the acceptance of a remittitur which is not made on those grounds is binding on plaintiff and cannot be raised on appeal.

4 C.J. p 874 note 48.

Extent of inquiry

The reviewing court, in determining whether excessive damages, for which the trial court ordered a remittitur, were influenced by the jury's passion or prejudice, should consider whether excessive damages were induced by incompetent evidence, by misconduct of court or counsel, or by other action at the trial.

Ohio.—Fromson & Davis Co. v. Reider, 189 N.E. 851, 127 Ohio St. 564.

Trial court is in much better position to determine whether the excessive verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, and its determination should ordinarily be accepted.

N.M.—Henderson v. Dreyfus, 191 P. 442, 26 N.M. 541.

Appellate court makes no finding of prejudice

The trial judge having declined to make a finding that his reason for granting a remittitur was a belief that the jury were influenced by passion and prejudice in fixing the damages, a reviewing court will not supply such a finding and bring it into the record.

Ohio.—Spear & Co. v. Fulton, 3 Ohio App. 40, affirmed 112 N.E. 1086, 92 Ohio St. 523.

Wash.—Olson v. Weitz, 221 P.2d 537, 37 Wash.2d 70.

Limitation or exception

(1) However, it has been said that the rendition of a verdict so large that it shows on its face that it is the result of prejudice or passion constitutes error requiring reversal, unless a suitable remittitur is entered.

Tex.—Fisheries Co. v. McCoy, Civ. App., 202 S.W. 343, error refused.

(2) So it has also been said that although there is no warrant in law for the reduction of a verdict, in order to save the expense of a new trial, the court may require plaintiff to accept a lesser sum or suffer a new trial.

Mont.—Fulton v. Chouteau County Farmers' Co., 37 P.2d 1025, 98 Mont. 48.

Extent verdict affected by bias undeterminable

Where the reviewing court cannot say from the evidence to what extent the jury's bias affected the amount of damages in a libel, the trial court's error in rendering judgment for twelve thousand dollars after a remittitur of fifty-three thousand dollars was reversible.

Tex.—World Oil Co. v. Hicks, Civ. App., 75 S.W.2d 905.

Trial court's statement that prejudice exists

(1) A statement by the trial judge in requiring a remittitur of a portion of the damages awarded by the verdict as a condition of denying a motion for a new trial that the amount of the verdict was excessive, and the excess was the result of passion and prejudice, does not show that it was the trial court's opinion that the entire verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, and therefore does not require a reversal of the judgment rendered after remittitur for an amount which was not excessive.

Cal.—Riley v. Southern Pac. Co., 207 P. 699, 57 C.A. 477.

N.J.—Wilson v. Custer, 28 A.2d 169, 129 N.J.Law 123.

(2) Jury's return of verdict for plaintiff in three times amount finally allowed by judge, who stated in minute order, directing remission of difference by plaintiff as condition precedent to denial of defendants' motion for new trial, that verdict was given under influence of passion and prejudice, did not show that judge's misconduct influenced jury to defendants' prejudice, where reduced amount was not disproportionate to plaintiff's damage.

Cal.—Karwoski v. Grant, 85 P.2d 944, 30 C.A.2d 171.

(3) Record, on appeal by defendant in action for personal injuries, was insufficient to establish that verdict for plaintiffs had been result of passion and prejudice, and did not entitle defendant to new trial, notwithstanding fact that trial court had reduced verdict for one of plaintiffs on finding that verdict had been rendered under influence of passion and prejudice.

Minn.—Conradson v. Vinkemeir, 51 N.W.2d 651, 235 Minn. 537.

Mere size does not show passion or prejudice

(1) The mere size of verdict for damages, although it be necessary to reduce it, does not indicate passion or prejudice.

Mo.—Kimberling v. Wabash Ry. Co., 85 S.W.2d 736, 337 Mo. 702—Greenwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 224 S.W. 404.

Okl.—Queen Ins. Co. of America v. Baker, 50 P.2d 371, 174 Okl. 273.

(2) That the trial court determined damages were excessive and reduced the amount awarded does not necessarily indicate that the verdict was influenced by prejudice or passion.

Cal.—Monterrosa v. Grace Lines, 204 P.2d 377, 90 C.A.2d 826—Turner v. Whittel, 38 P.2d 835, 2 C.A.2d 585.

pears.[70]

Reasonably supported by evidence

Ariz.—Sisters of St. Joseph in Arizona v. Edwards, 44 P.2d 155, 45 Ariz. 407.

Personal injuries

Where character of a plaintiff's injuries is such that jurors cannot determine their extent by observation as in case of loss of a leg, the court should be slow to disturb verdict where it is supported by substantial evidence, the weight and credibility of which is for the jury unless the amount of the verdict is manifestly out of proportion to injuries proved.

Rule inapplicable in case of attorney's fee

Approval or disapproval by trial court generally see infra § 1653.

Weight of trial court's opinion

(1) The opinion of the trial justice with respect to the justice or injustice of a verdict is not conclusive, although entitled to great weight.

W.Va.—Yuncke v. Welker, 36 S.E.2d 410, 128 W.Va. 299.

(2) All presumptions are in favor of the action of the trial court in sustaining a verdict, and the reviewing court will not interfere unless it clearly appears that substantial justice has not been done.
Ala.—Austin v. Tennessee Biscuit Co., 52 So.2d 190, 255 Ala. 573.
Birmingham Electric Co. v. Bailey, 15 So.2d 465, 31 Ala.App. 275, certiorari denied 15 So.2d 469, 244 Ala. 671.
R.I.—Chisholm v. S. S. Kresge Co., 182 A. 4, 55 R.I. 422.
4 C.J. p 870 note 97 [a].

(3) In reviewing evidence in support of an award of damages, the supreme court defers to the judgment of the trial judge and the jury unless viewing the evidence in light most favorable to the plaintiff the damages awarded are patently excessive.
Mo.—Enyart v. Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co., 241 S.W.2d 268—Cordray v. City of Brookfield, 88 S.W. 161.

(4) Action of the trial court in denying motion to set aside verdict is entitled to great weight, where the matter involved is the amount of damages awarded for personal injuries.
Conn.—Briggs v. Becker, 124 A. 826, 101 Conn. 62.
Tenn.—Blalock v. Temple, 276 S.W. 2d 493, 38 Tenn.App. 463—Finks v. Gillum, 273 S.W.2d 722, 38 Tenn. App. 304—Thoni v. Hayborn, 260 S.W.2d 376, 37 Tenn.App. 56.

(5) The appellate court, in determining whether approval of the amount of the verdict was an abuse of discretion, will not weigh the evidence.
Pa.—Krauss v. Cohn, 93 Pa.Super. 101.

(6) If it appears, from trial justice's decision on motion for new trial, that he has not fully regarded the elements of evidence and has based his decision on a personal reluctance to differ with jury or to substitute his judgment on the evidence for their judgment, when the circumstances require it, then his approval of their verdict lacks the persuasive force that it regularly possesses.
R.I.—Paradise v. Rick, 7 A.2d 713, 63 R.I. 207.

Absence of abuse of discretion court, the amount awarded by the jury is larger or smaller than it should have been,[74] where there was evidence to sustain the verdict,[75] and nothing to induce the belief that the jury were actuated by prejudice, partiality, or corruption;[76] nor will a verdict be disturbed merely because it is for less than the damages testified to by the witnesses,[77] or because the amount found is between the estimates of witnesses.[78] A verdict for an amount within the range of the testimony will not be set aside because it does not correspond to the contentions of the parties.[79]

It has been held, however, that an appellate court may or must interfere if the verdict is not reasonably within the range of the evidence,[80] or where there has been an abuse of discretion,[81] or if it appears to be the result of passion and prejudice.[82] In determining the reasonableness of damages, each case must stand on its own facts.[82.5] If plaintiff is entitled to a recovery only of the particular amount, according to his own testimony, or if defendant is entitled to recover another amount, according to his testimony, it has been held that a judgment for any other amount than one of these two is altogether unsupported by evidence.[83] So, where the jury have no discretion in fixing the amount of recovery, as where it is fixed by a definite rule or statute, a verdict for an amount at variance with that so fixed will be set aside.[84]

To uphold the lower court's action in sustaining plaintiff's motion for judgment on answers to interrogatories notwithstanding a general verdict, the supreme court was required to be able to say from facts found that plaintiff was, as a matter of law, entitled to judgment for the amount entered by the lower court.[85] A review of the evidence to determine liability in the first instance is a condition precedent to a decision as to the amount of recovery.[85.5]

§ 1651. —— Excessive Award

a. When verdict sustained
b. When verdict set aside
c. Effect of remittitur

a. When Verdict Sustained

While an appellate court generally has the duty to review the verdict of a jury claimed to be excessive, it will not interfere therewith where the verdict is not manifestly or grossly excessive or not excessive as a matter of law.

While an appellate court generally has the duty to review the verdict of a jury claimed to be excessive,[85.50] the primary duty of guarding against

Limitation of rule

The principle requiring the verdict to be set aside, which cannot be justified on any hypothesis presented by the evidence with respect to the amount thereof, applies only to cases where damages sought to be recovered are liquidated.

Okl.—Russell Jobbers' Mills v. Dill-Crossett, 227 P. 126, 102 Okl. 134.

Mere preponderance

Verdict of jury will not be disturbed on appeal on matter of damages when a mere preponderance of evidence is against it, but will be set aside when it is palpably against the weight of evidence.

(3) In determining whether a verdict awarded parents for the death of an infant is excessive, the appellate court should consider the age, physical and mental condition of the infant, and its probable earnings during minority, as reflected by the occupation and circumstances in life of the parents, and occasionally other excessive verdicts necessarily rests to a great extent on the trial judge, who will presumably not allow excessive verdicts to stand,[86] and the authority invested in appellate courts to disturb the verdict of factors, together with all the evidence.

Pa.—Kite v. Jones, 132 A.2d 683, 389 Pa. 339.

Rule in case of attorney's fees

(1) The court of civil appeals could disregard expert testimony in determining whether an attorney's fees recovered against an insurance company were excessive, and find a reasonable amount from its own knowledge.

Tex.—Southland Life Ins. Co. v. Norton, Civ.App., 9 S.W.2d 752.

(2) The court of civil appeals, determining whether a judgment for attorney's fees against an insurance company was excessive, was not bound by direct testimony in the record on the issue.

Tex.—Southland Life Ins. Co. v. Norton, Com.App., 5 S.W.2d 767, mandate conformed to, Civ.App., 9 S. W.2d 752.

(3) Where, as to the reasonable value of an attorney's services, there is expert evidence on the part of defendant that the value is one thousand dollars and on the part of plaintiff that the value is twelve thousand dollars, the supreme court will not disturb as excessive a six thousand dollar verdict approved by the trial court.

Minn.—Kolars v. Delnik, 266 N.W. 705, 197 Minn. 183.

(4) Reviewing court, in determining whether attorney's fee was excessive, may look to entire record and view matter in light of testimony, record before it, amount in controversy, and common knowledge and experience of its members.

Broader power

Court of appeals does not have as broad discretionary powers in setting aside verdicts as excessive as do trial judges.

Ga.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wells, 52 S.E.2d 496, 78 Ga.App. 859.

On motion for new trial

(1) In reviewing award of damages, considerable weight must be given to the fact that trial court weighed all the facts of case in refusing on motion for new trial to reduce amount of damages or to grant a new trial.

Cal.—Taylor v. Pacific Container Co., App., 306 P.2d 1049.

(2) Where motion for new trial on ground of excessiveness of verdict is overruled, supreme court cannot the jury on the ground of excessive damages is one which should be exercised with great caution and discretion.[87] It follows that ordinarily such a court will refuse to set aside a judgment on the ground that the award is excessive.[88] The appellate court must evaluate a verdict by the particular facts of the case, taking into consideration the surrounding circumstances, economic conditions,[88.5] and amounts weigh the evidence but can consider only evidence favorable to verdict.

Mo.—Mitchell v. Pla-Mor, Inc., 237 S. W.2d 189, 361 Mo. 946.

(3) On appeal from order granting new trial on ground that verdict was excessive, in absence of remittitur, it is not the duty of the court to weigh the evidence as to amount of plaintiff's injury but to determine whether in requiring remittitur, and on plaintiff's failure to remit, trial court abused its discretion in granting new trial.

General rules govern

(1) The right to interfere with a verdict on the ground that excessive damages are awarded is controlled by the rules governing the right to disturb any other issue of fact found by the jury.
Tex.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Coleman, Civ.App., 166 S.W. 685.

(2) An attack on a verdict on the ground that the damages are excessive is in fact an attack on the ground that it is against the evidence on the subject of damages, and is governed by the same rules as govern an attack on a verdict on the ground it is not supported by the evidence.
Vt.—Platt v. Shields, 119 A. 520, 96 Vt. 257.

Highest award

Before court of civil appeals has authority to reverse for excessiveness, it must first determine highest award which would not require reversal for excessiveness in order to determine extent of excessiveness.

Consideration

To find that a verdict is excessive requires a consideration of the weight of the evidence.

Ohio.—Matthis v. Youngstown Municipal Ry. Co., 42 N.E.2d 754, 140 Ohio St. 164.

Damages in excess of claim outside court

The fact that the amount of the judgment exceeds the amount of the loss as stated by plaintiff in a letter to the company written soon after the fire does not afford ground for reversing the judgment, where evidence detailing the loss and given at the trial supports the finding of the jury as to the amount of loss sustained.

Even if against evidence

That the amount of a verdict is against the preponderance of the evidence does not authorize the appellate court to set it aside as excessive.
Tex.—Houston Belt & Terminal Ry. Co. v. Lee, Civ.App., 185 S.W. 393, error refused.

Damages within range of testimony

Whether a verdict is excessive is purely a question of fact, and where the evidence from which it must be determined is wholly that of expert witnesses, and the verdict is well within the range of the testimony, the appellate court cannot interfere.
Wash.—Elkenbary v. Calispel Light & Power Co., 231 P. 946, 132 Wash. 255.

Substantial evidence

A verdict for damage substantially supported by evidence will not be set aside as excessive.

been no abuse of discretion on the part of the jury.[98]

So the verdict should not be set aside as excessive unless there has been a mistake of principles on which damages were estimated,[99] unless it is apparent that the whole of the evidence of plaintiff considered standing alone without reference to the countervailing proofs of defendant is insufficient to support the judgment for the amount for which it was ultimately entered,[1] or unless the verdict is so excessive as to offend against all sense of right.[1.5] Many decisions have stated the rule in the form that the appellate court will not interfere

Effect of size of verdict

(1) The mere size of the verdict, although excessive, does not show partiality, prejudice, or passion on the part of the jury, at least where the evidence will support a substantial verdict.

Ohio.—Cleveland Ry. Co. v. Mueller, 166 N.E. 391, 31 Ohio App. 488.

Passion or prejudice not shown

(1) In an action against two young defendants for the death of a guest in an automobile owned by one and driven by the other, the record was held not to show that the jury were actuated by prejudice, partiality, and sympathy in awarding seven thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars for the death of such guest, who was a young girl.

Va.—Margiotta v. Aycock, 174 S.E. 831, 162 Va. 557.

(2) In an action by a personal representative for the death of a miner, the amount recovered to become assets of the estate under statute, a verdict for fifteen thousand dollars will not be overturned on appeal as given under the influence of passion or prejudice where deceased was twenty-six years of age, earning six dollars to six dollars and forty cents per day, and with a life expectancy of thirty-seven and forty-three hundredths years.

Presumption

Unless a verdict or judgment is so grossly disproportionate to the reasonable limit of compensation warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice and raise a presumption of prejudice and passion, the appellate court cannot disturb it.

Exercise of independent judgment

(1) Exceptions on ground of excessive damages to verdicts for plaintiffs required supreme court to determine whether trial justice exercised an independent judgment on the weight of the evidence and credibility of witnesses.

R.I.—Lottinville v. Dwyer, 27 A.2d 305, 68 R.I. 268.

(2) Where trial justice erred in expressly refusing to exercise his experienced and independent judgment in passing on defendant's motion for new trial on ground that damages awarded plaintiff by verdict were excessive, his mere formal approval of amount thereof carries no weight in supreme court on defendant's exceptions.

R.I.—Hayman v. Union Corp., 17 A. 2d 30, 66 R.I. 11.

(3) Where trial court's denial of administrator's motion for new trial on ground of excessive damages was reached through reluctance to differ with jury, supreme court would examine the testimony to determine the weight of the evidence and credibility of witnesses.

have been better satisfied with, or would itself have rendered, a smaller recovery is no ground for interfering with the verdict of the jury.[6] This rule is not abrogated by a statute giving authority to appellate courts to suggest a remittitur of the excess and to affirm the judgment.[7]

The general rule that a verdict ordinarily will not be set aside as excessive where not palpably against the evidence has been applied in a wide variety of cases, as in actions for personal injuries;[8]

Presumption

After refusal of a new trial by trial judge, case comes to court of appeals with a presumption in favor of verdict and with stamp of approval of judge who tried case, and verdict cannot be set aside as excessive unless record shows finding was prejudiced or biased or procured by corrupt means.

4 C.J. p 873 note 23.

No fixed rule exists for controlling decision of court of appeals as to whether amount awarded as damages in personal injury action shall be regarded so excessive as to authorize interference with verdict and judgment rendered thereon after circuit judge has considered question on motion for new trial.
Ky.—Sullivan v. Saylor, 132 S.W. 2d 340, 279 Ky. 820.

Only method of determining whether personal injury damages are excessive is by comparing the amount awarded with the evidence.
Cal.—Horn v. Yellow Cab Co., 263 P. 1025, 88 C.A. 678.

Close scrutiny required
When verdict in personal injury suit is twice what it should be, the case calls for the closest scrutiny and consideration on the subject of passion and prejudice.
Ohio.—Cleveland Ry. Co. v. Mueller, 166 N.E. 391, 31 Ohio App. 488.

Favorable standpoint
In action for injuries, supreme court, in considering excessiveness of award on appeal, would consider evidence as to nature and extent of injuries from standpoint favorable to plaintiff.
Mo.—Douglas v. Twenter, 259 S.W. 2d 353, 364 Mo. 71—Meade v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 250 S.W.2d 513.

Gravity of injury and large amount claimed and allowed as damages may demand more than ordinary consideration by the reviewing court.
La.—Miller v. City of New Orleans, App., 152 So. 141.

Grounds for interference with claimed excessive verdict must be most clearly apparent and made particularly strong, where plaintiff subjected himself to personal inspection or examination of injuries before the jury, and defendants did not undertake to dispute the injuries or effects thereof.
Miss.—Public Service Corporation v. Watts, 150 So. 192, 168 Miss. 235.

Larger than verdicts in similar cases
That the amount awarded as personal injury damages may be larger than is ordinarily allowed in such cases is not a basis for holding the award excessive as a matter of law.
Cal.—Crane v. Smith, 144 P.2d 356, 23 C.2d 288.
Corvello v. Baumsteiger, 1 P.2d 484, 115 C.A. 194—Barrett v. Harman, 1 P.2d 458, 115 C.A. 283—May v. Farrell, 271 P. 789, 94 C. A. 703.

Pain and suffering as element of damages
In an action for personal injuries, the element of pain and suffering is one which must be left largely to the sound judgment of the jury, and their conclusion as to the proper amount of damages sustained should not be disturbed unless the award is clearly excessive.
Ark.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Hendrix, 277 S.W. 337, 169 Ark. 825, certiorari denied 46 S.Ct. 351, 270 U.S. 651, 70 L.Ed. 781.

Permanency of injuries are eliminated from the consideration of the reviewing court, where evidence of permanence was doubtful and recovery was by plaintiff's instruction limited to pain and suffering to occur in the future.
Mo.—Sachse v. Highland Dairy Farms Co., App., 45 S.W.2d 934.

Verdicts held not excessive

4 C.J. p 873 note 31.

Real question on appeal where verdict for intestate's death from gross negligence warranting exemplary damages is attacked as excessive is whether under all the facts and circumstances the amount of the verdict addresses itself to the mind of the court, at first blush, as being so flagrantly against the evidence as to have been induced by passion or prejudice.
Ky.—Kentucky & I. T. R. Co. v. Becker's Adm'r, 214 S.W. 900, 185 Ky. 169.

In absence of legal measure of damages

As respects the measure of exemplary damages recoverable, generally, where the law furnishes no legal measure of damages and they are unliquidated, the amount to be awarded rests largely in the discretion of the jury and unless the award is so large as to indicate that it is the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption, or that the evidence has been disregarded, the jury's verdict is conclusive and will not be set aside as excessive, on appeal.
Tex.—Home Furniture Co. v. Hawkins, Civ.App., 84 S.W.2d 830, error dismissed.

Actual and exemplary damages combined

Where the amount of actual damages, as distinguished from exemplary damages, is not disclosed by the verdict for plaintiff for five hundred dollars in a civil action for assault and battery, the court cannot say upon the record that the actual damages could not have exceeded one hundred dollars, so as to render the exemplary damages so excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice.

b. When Verdict Set Aside

A reviewing court may, in a proper case, set aside a verdict on the ground of excessiveness.

Notwithstanding the general rule stated supra subdivision a of this section that ordinarily the verdict of a jury will not be interfered with on the ground that it is excessive, reviewing courts generally have power to set aside verdicts because excessive,[19] and such power exists although the trial court has refused to set aside the verdict[20] where it is clear that the latter court has abused the discretion vested in it.[21] A verdict will be set aside by an appellate court as excessive where there is not evidence on which the amount allowed could properly have been awarded;[22] where the verdict must of necessity

Improper argument of counsel for plaintiff in a personal injury action will be considered in determining the question of excessive damages.
Mo.—Ostertag v. Union Pac. R. Co., 169 S.W. 1, 261 Mo. 457.

Just limits must not be exceeded

(1) Although there is no statutory limit to the amount of damages for wrongful death, the appellate court must see that just limits are not exceeded.
Tenn.—Garis v. Eberling, 71 S.W. 2d 215, 18 Tenn.App. 1.

(2) The reviewing court, in determining what are just limits of verdicts in death actions, cannot merely substitute its judgment for that of the jury in a particular case, but will consider the amount awarded in other similar cases in determining whether the particular verdict is excessive.
Tenn.—Garis v. Eberling, supra.

To justify setting aside an excessive verdict, it is not necessary to determine that it was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption.
N.Y.—Hayes v. Albany Ice Cream Co., 165 N.Y.S. 801.

Verdict in excess of actual loss

Where it appears from the evidence that the recovery in a personal injury case is in excess of the actual loss sustained, the judgment will be modified or vacated, although the damages rest largely in the jury's discretion.
Idaho.—Beaton v. City of St. Maries, 151 P. 996, 27 Idaho 638.

Where punitive damages justified

The supreme court had the duty to review verdicts for excessiveness, even where a wanton wrong justified the imposition of punitive damages.

Diminished damages

In personal injury action against railroad brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, where finding of compensatory damages was grossly excessive, a further finding which substantially diminished such have been for a smaller sum than that awarded;[23] or where the testimony most favorable to the successful party will not sustain the inference of fact on which the damages are estimated.[24]

Likewise, the appellate court may set aside a verdict on the ground of excessiveness where the amount awarded is so excessive as to lead to the conclusion that the verdict was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption or other misconduct,[25] or of some error or mistake of principle,[26] or to warrant the conclusion that the jury were not governed by the evidence;[27] where the verdict violates the damages because of plaintiff's own negligence did not relieve railroad from injurious consequences of excessive judgment.

Substantial instead of nominal damages

(1) In an action for the value of stock because of the retention of stock certificate, in which it was alleged to be of the same value as when the certificate was deposited, the verdict and judgment awarding plaintiff substantial damages was erroneous, and will be set aside on appeal; he being entitled only to nominal damages.
Okl.—Whitehead v. Gormley, 245 P. 562, 116 Okl. 287, 47 A.L.R. 171.

(2) A verdict for plaintiff for damages caused by the construction of an elevated railroad cannot be sustained, where the testimony of the only witness showing damage was based on detriment to use value and the evidence was overwhelming that the sale value had increased.
Ill.—Brand v. Union Elevated R. Co., 115 N.E. 532, 277 Ill. 356.

(3) In an action for damage caused by flooding land, where trespass was proved but no actual damages shown, and the verdict was for a substantial sum, the rulings of the court restricting damages could not be considered.

Misconduct of party

Where it appears that a seemingly excessive verdict probably was contributed to by misconduct of the prevailing party, the supreme court will order a new trial in the interest of orderly administration of justice.

measure of damages prescribed by law;[28] or where the damages awarded are so great as to show that the jury abused their discretion in fixing the amount.[29] If the appellate court is asked to review the act of the trial court where, in the exercise of its discretionary power, it has seen fit to set aside the verdict on this ground, every intendment is indulged in the appellate court in support of the action of the court below.[30]

c. Effect of Remittitur

The appellate court ordinarily defers to the trial court's discretion in the matter of remittiturs in cases of excessive verdicts, and it will not interfere with the verdict as modified by the remittitur if there is evidence sustaining the judgment for the balance.

The exercise of discretion by the trial court, in the matter of remittiturs in cases of excessive verdicts, will ordinarily be sustained by the reviewing court,[31] and the reviewing court will consider the Examination of record

Although supreme court will not weigh evidence relating to plaintiff's disabilities on appeal from order granting defendant's motion for new trial on ground that verdict was excessive after plaintiff refused to enter remittitur ordered by trial court, supreme court would examine record to determine whether there was substantial evidence to sustain trial court's view that such disabilities were not as serious or as permanent as claimed or that some of the disabilities did not result from the accident.

Remittitur by appellate court see infra § 1653 b.

Effect of reduction

(1) Mere fact that verdict was reduced by trial court is not evidence of passion and prejudice.
Cal.—McCullough v. Langer, 73 P. 2d 649, 23 C.A.2d 510—Papineau v. Distributors Packing Co., 52 P.2d 571, 10 C.A.2d 558.

(2) Fact that trial court required the entry of a remittitur and overruled defendant's motion for new trial indicates that trial judge believed that trial of the cause was fair and free from error, save that the jury had made a larger award than the evidence justified.
Mo.—Schaefer v. Transamerican Freight Lines, 173 S.W.2d 20.

(3) Trial court's action in requiring a four thousand five hundred dollars remittitur cured any error jury might have committed in fixing plaintiff's damages for injuries at fifteen thousand dollars, and therefore the court of civil appeals on appeal by

case as on the reduced amount.[32] Hence, where a remittitur for part of the recovery is entered in the lower court, a judgment for the balance will of course be upheld by the appellate court where it would have sustained a verdict for the full amount.[33] So also, where the court directs a remittitur for part of the verdict, or a remittitur for part thereof is entered with plaintiff's consent, a reviewing court will uphold a judgment for the balance if there is evidence sustaining it,[34] even though the amount defendant was not required to determine whether there was such alleged excessiveness in the fifteen thousand dollars award, but only whether evidence supported the ten thousand five hundred dollars finally allowed.

Tex.—Younger Bros. v. Hibbard, Civ. App., 201 S.W.2d 624.

Weight given trial court's opinion

(1) The trial court's opinion that the amount of damages awarded for injuries sustained is excessive by a certain amount should have great weight on appeal.

(2) Judgment of the trial court, which on motion for new trial for excessiveness of verdict required plaintiff to reduce the verdict or submit to a new trial, has material influence with the supreme court in determining whether the verdict was excessive.

Miss.—Gulf Coast Motor Express Co. v. Diggs, 165 So. 292, 174 Miss. 650.

(3) In determining whether verdict was excessive notwithstanding remittitur, court of appeals was required to consider the question in light most favorable to plaintiff, disregarding evidence of defendant's side of case which contradicted plaintiff's evidence.

Mo.—Couch v. St. Louis Public Service Co., App., 173 S.W.2d 617.

(4) In reviewing assignment of error that damages awarded were grossly excessive, reviewing court does not weigh the evidence but examines the record to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support trial court's ruling, and if the evidence, viewed in light most favorable to ruling, affords reasonable and substantial support thereof, ruling must be sustained.

as reduced seems large,[35] if it is not clearly excessive.[36]

If, however, it is apparent to the appellate court that the verdict is the result of prejudice or passion or other improper influence, a remittitur will not remove the taint of the vice,[37] and a remittitur

Absence abuse of discretion

Where the trial court orders a remittitur, the appellate court will not further reduce the verdict, except on a clear showing of abuse of the court's discretion.

Mo.—Stelmach v. Saul, App., 50 S.W. 2d 721.

Effect of statute

Prior to the adoption of a statute relating to remittitur, the acceptance of a remittitur was a binding election on the part of plaintiff; the statute only affects those cases where the remittitur is made on account of passion or prejudice of the jury and hence the acceptance of a remittitur which is not made on those grounds is binding on plaintiff and cannot be raised on appeal.

Extent of inquiry

The reviewing court, in determining whether excessive damages, for which the trial court ordered a remittitur, were influenced by the jury's passion or prejudice, should consider whether excessive damages were induced by incompetent evidence, by misconduct of court or counsel, or by other action at the trial.

Ohio.—Fromson & Davis Co. v. Reider, 189 N.E. 851, 127 Ohio St. 564.

Trial court is in much better position to determine whether the excessive verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, and its determination should ordinarily be accepted.

N.M.—Henderson v. Dreyfus, 191 P. 442, 26 N.M. 541.

Appellate court makes no finding of prejudice

The trial judge having declined to make a finding that his reason for granting a remittitur was a belief that the jury were influenced by passion and prejudice in fixing the damages, a reviewing court will not supply such a finding and bring it into the record.

Ohio.—Spear & Co. v. Fulton, 3 Ohio App. 40, affirmed 112 N.E. 1086, 92 Ohio St. 523.

Wash.—Olson v. Weitz, 221 P.2d 537, 37 Wash.2d 70.

Limitation or exception

(1) However, it has been said that the rendition of a verdict so large that it shows on its face that it is the result of prejudice or passion constitutes error requiring reversal, unless a suitable remittitur is entered.

Tex.—Fisheries Co. v. McCoy, Civ. App., 202 S.W. 343, error refused.

(2) So it has also been said that although there is no warrant in law for the reduction of a verdict, in order to save the expense of a new trial, the court may require plaintiff to accept a lesser sum or suffer a new trial.

Mont.—Fulton v. Chouteau County Farmers' Co., 37 P.2d 1025, 98 Mont. 48.

Extent verdict affected by bias undeterminable

Where the reviewing court cannot say from the evidence to what extent the jury's bias affected the amount of damages in a libel, the trial court's error in rendering judgment for twelve thousand dollars after a remittitur of fifty-three thousand dollars was reversible.

Tex.—World Oil Co. v. Hicks, Civ. App., 75 S.W.2d 905.

Trial court's statement that prejudice exists

(1) A statement by the trial judge in requiring a remittitur of a portion of the damages awarded by the verdict as a condition of denying a motion for a new trial that the amount of the verdict was excessive, and the excess was the result of passion and prejudice, does not show that it was the trial court's opinion that the entire verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, and therefore does not require a reversal of the judgment rendered after remittitur for an amount which was not excessive.

Cal.—Riley v. Southern Pac. Co., 207 P. 699, 57 C.A. 477.

N.J.—Wilson v. Custer, 28 A.2d 169, 129 N.J.Law 123.

(2) Jury's return of verdict for plaintiff in three times amount finally allowed by judge, who stated in minute order, directing remission of difference by plaintiff as condition precedent to denial of defendants' motion for new trial, that verdict was given under influence of passion and prejudice, did not show that judge's misconduct influenced jury to defendants' prejudice, where reduced amount was not disproportionate to plaintiff's damage.

Cal.—Karwoski v. Grant, 85 P.2d 944, 30 C.A.2d 171.

(3) Record, on appeal by defendant in action for personal injuries, was insufficient to establish that verdict for plaintiffs had been result of passion and prejudice, and did not entitle defendant to new trial, notwithstanding fact that trial court had reduced verdict for one of plaintiffs on finding that verdict had been rendered under influence of passion and prejudice.

Minn.—Conradson v. Vinkemeir, 51 N.W.2d 651, 235 Minn. 537.

Mere size does not show passion or prejudice

(1) The mere size of verdict for damages, although it be necessary to reduce it, does not indicate passion or prejudice.

Mo.—Kimberling v. Wabash Ry. Co., 85 S.W.2d 736, 337 Mo. 702—Greenwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 224 S.W. 404.

Okl.—Queen Ins. Co. of America v. Baker, 50 P.2d 371, 174 Okl. 273.

(2) That the trial court determined damages were excessive and reduced the amount awarded does not necessarily indicate that the verdict was influenced by prejudice or passion.

Cal.—Monterrosa v. Grace Lines, 204 P.2d 377, 90 C.A.2d 826—Turner v. Whittel, 38 P.2d 835, 2 C.A.2d 585.

cannot cure a verdict which is entirely without evidence to sustain it[38] or which is grossly excessive even after remittitur.[39]

Where the remittitur ordered by the trial court appears unwarranted and too large, the appellate court may overrule the remittitur and direct restoration of judgment entered on the verdict,[39.5] or it may vacate the excessive portion of the remittitur.[40]

§ 1652. —— Inadequate Award

a. When verdict sustained
b. When verdict set aside

a. When Verdict Sustained

Ordinarily a verdict of a jury will not be disturbed by the appellate court on the ground of inadequacy.

Generally, the rules governing the authority of an appellate court to set aside a verdict because of inadequacy are the same as those applicable to an excessive verdict.[40.50] The question of inadequacy of damages is one first addressed to the trial court, which must bear practically the whole responsibility in every case.[41] Ordinarily, therefore, a verdict will not be disturbed by an appellate court on the ground

Mo.—Cruce v. Gulf, M. & O. R. Co., 238 S.W.2d 674, 361 Mo. 1138.
Couch v. St. Louis Public Service Co., App., 173 S.W.2d 617—Todd v. Libby, McNeill & Libby, App., 110 S.W.2d 830—Steiner v. Degan, App., 101 S.W.2d 519.
Ohio.—Jones v. Santel, 128 N.E.2d 36, 164 Ohio St. 93.

(3) Verdict of sixteen thousand dollars for fraud in inducing mortgagors to forego a redemption was not the result of passion or prejudice, although the trial court required a remittitur of five thousand dollars and the supreme court prescribed a further reduction of five thousand dollars as a condition of affirmance.

Mention of insurance company

Where verdict was excessive and defendant had been deprived of a fair trial by diligent suggestion, by examination of jurors, and otherwise, that the damage was covered by insurance, the supreme court will not reduce the verdict, but will grant a new trial.
Iowa.—Ryan v. Trenkle, 200 N.W. 318, 199 Iowa 636.

Absence of prejudice indicated by offer of remittitur

Where jury, in a servant's action for injuries, returned a verdict for two thousand five hundred dollars, the action of trial court in giving plaintiff an option to remit one thousand dollars or to submit to a new trial was necessarily a finding that there was neither passion nor prejudice on part of jury.
Kan.—Hockman v. Sifers Candy Co., 178 P. 254, 104 Kan. 94.

Extent of remittitur does not show passion or prejudice

(1) The action of the trial court in modifying the verdict cannot be accepted as proof that the trial court considered the verdict to have resulted from passion or prejudice.
Cal.—Bennett v. Central California Traction Co., 1 P.2d 47, 115 C.A. 1—Connerly v. Correia, 226 P. 841, 66 C.A. 570.
Ill.—Sells v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 206 Ill.App. 45. See Vondra v. Felcman, 202 Ill.App. 136.

(2) That the trial court reduced a twenty thousand dollar verdict in an alienation of affections case to ten thousand dollars was held not to show that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice.
Kan.—Davidson v. Douglass, 284 P. 427, 129 Kan. 766.
Mo.—Slater v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 24 S.W.2d 660, 224 Mo. App. 824.

(3) That the trial court ordered a remittitur amounting to fifty per cent of a fifteen thousand dollar verdict was held not conclusive proof that excessive damages were given under the influence of passion or prejudice so as to require granting a new trial, where prejudicial error did not otherwise appear.
Ohio.—Fromson & Davis Co. v. Reider, 189 N.E. 851, 127 Ohio St. 564.

(4) That the trial court reduced a three thousand five hundred dollar personal injury verdict to five hundred dollars does not indicate passion or prejudice on jury's part requiring reversal, where the court evidently acted on the theory that an operation performed on plaintiff eighteen months after injury was not caused by the accident.
Mo.—Brohammer v. Lager, App., 194 S.W. 1072.

(5) The fact that the trial court reduced a judgment for injuries from fifteen thousand dollars to four thousand dollars did not show bias or prejudice on the part of the jury, so as to require a new trial.
Mo.—Lilly v. Kansas City Rys. Co., App., 209 S.W. 969.

(6) Yet it has been held that the court, of its own motion, in a personal injury case, entered a remittitur of sixty per cent, indicated that the verdict was the result of prejudice.

Evidence erroneously admitted

In an action against a hotel keeper for injuries to a guest sustained in a fire, in which it was claimed that the fire was due to the hotel keeper's negligence, an excessive verdict is not cured by remittitur where hearsay testimony as to what witness had been told concerning the origin of the fire by person witness had met on the street, who claimed to have been a porter at the hotel at the time of the fire, and testimony by the assistant fire chief that his suspicions were aroused, was admitted in evidence although subsequently stricken out.

Mo.—Coghlan v. Trumbo, 179 S.W.2d 705.

Weight given to trial court's action

(1) The appellate court should attach some weight to the trial court's refusal to set aside a verdict on the ground of inadequacy.

(2) Attitude of the trial court has great weight with reviewing courts, particularly on question of alleged inadequacy of amount of damages awarded.

Mo.—Scully v. Rolwing, App., 115 S.W.2d 96.

Power of appellate courts

Power of an appellate court to reverse a judgment because of inadequacy of damages is much more limited than power of trial court to grant new trial for inadequacy of damages.

Cal.—Toshio Hamasaki v. Flotho, 248 P.2d 910, 39 C.2d 602.

Discretion of trial judge

Granting of a new trial on ground that verdict was inadequate is a matter for exercise of judicial discretion by trial judge and verdict will not be overturned on appeal except in exceptional cases.

Ky.—Smith v. Bailey, 223 S.W.2d 582, 311 Ky. 118.

Order granting new trial

Granting of new trial on ground that jury's verdict is inadequate is equivalent to granting thereof on ground that verdict is against evidence, and sole question on appeal from such order is whether there was any substantial evidence to support order, in which case ruling will not be disturbed.

Comparative negligence cases

(1) Where comparative negligence doctrine is applicable, the jury's discretion in comparing negligence of parties is unrestrained, and their finding for plaintiff in such case of only nominal amount will not be disturbed.

Ga.—Moore v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 172 S.E. 680, 48 Ga.App. 185.

(2) While, because of plaintiff's negligence, the verdict may be for less than the damages sustained, when the extent to which plaintiff's negligence contributed is a question for the jury, the court of appeals can only determine whether the verdict could have been found on defendant's negligence alone.

Ga.—Georgia Ry. & Power Co. v. Tribble, 116 S.E. 207, 29 Ga.App. 575.

(3) In a suit for damages to plaintiff's automobile, resulting from a collision with defendant's automobile, where there was evidence as to the value of plaintiff's automobile before and after the collision, as to the character and amount of damage, and as to the value of repairs, and an inference of negligence on plaintiff's part was authorized, a verdict for plaintiff being more or less uncertain as to the amount, plaintiff could not complain that the evidence demanded a larger verdict in his behalf.

Ga.—Douglas v. Prescott, 121 S.E. 689, 31 Ga.App. 684.

(4) Where jury were authorized under evidence and charge to apply rule of comparative negligence, award of five hundred dollars for injuries sustained when struck by truck was not so inadequate as to justify an inference of gross mistake or undue bias which would warrant disturbance of verdict on appeal.

Ga.—Baggett v. Jackson, 54 S.E.2d 146, 79 Ga.App. 460.

Negligence case

Plaintiff appealing on the ground that a verdict for personal injuries was inadequate cannot prevail if his own negligence contributed to his injury nor unless defendant was negligent.

Minn.—Shearer v. Puent, 208 N.W. 182, 166 Minn. 425.

Nominal damages

(1) Nominal damages do not compensate for a substantial injury, but if the injury is nominal an award of damages not substantial in amount will not be disturbed as inadequate.

Minn.—Greenfield v. Unique Theatre Co., 177 N.W. 666, 146 Minn. 17.

(2) A verdict in a nominal amount for damages from flowage caused by obstruction of a drainage ditch, under the evidence in the case, was not so grossly inadequate as to warrant this court in granting a new trial.

Minn.—Koch v. Speiser, 176 N.W. 754, 145 Minn. 227.

(3) The court cannot set aside a verdict awarding nominal damages, where the jury, although finding that plaintiff had suffered injuries, found from the evidence that they were so slight that nominal damages were adequate.

is conflicting;[44] where based on findings justified by the evidence;[45] where the amount recoverable is left in doubt by the evidence;[46] or where the evidence shows that the jury, as reasonable men, could have fairly awarded the amount allowed,[47] even though they could have found a larger verdict.[48]

It has also been held that a reviewing court will not set aside a verdict as inadequate where it does not appear that the verdict is for less than the actual pecuniary loss suffered;[49] where the damages are of a class as to which no definite measure exists;[50] or where the inadequacy is not such as to shock the conscience and to clearly show that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice, or that they proceeded on an erroneous basis in arriving at their conclusion.[51] So the fact that the reviewing

Review in favor of verdict
In reviewing trial court's decision on motion to set aside verdict for inadequacy of damages awarded, fact that verdict has received express approval of trial court inclines supreme court strongly in favor of verdict, and ruling must stand if such ruling can be justified on any reasonable view of evidence, considered in the light most favorable for the defendant.

One or more claims
A reviewing court is not authorized to reverse a judgment on the ground of inadequacy of damages, where the verdict of the jury may have been based in whole or in part upon one or more of several claims for damages advanced by plaintiff.

court would have sustained a larger verdict, or that the amount awarded was not justified by the evidence, does not justify setting aside the verdict as inadequate,[52] as this does not necessarily indicate passion and prejudice justifying the granting of a new trial.[53]

b. When Verdict Set Aside

The appellate court may, in a proper case, set aside a verdict for inadequacy, as where the verdict is so small as to be clearly against the weight of the evidence.

The reviewing court may, in a proper case, set aside a verdict on the ground that the amount awarded is inadequate, and this it may do even though the trial court refused to set aside the verdict.[54] Thus it has been held that the verdict may be set aside if the finding is for such an inadequate amount as to indicate that the jury must have been influenced by passion, prejudice,[55] perversity, or a gross misconception of the evidence;[56] where the verdict is so small as to be clearly against the weight of the evidence;[57] where the jury omitted to consider some element of damage;[58] where the evidence shows that the damages suffered were susceptible of definite pecuniary measurement and exceeded the amount awarded by the verdict;[59] or where the ver-

Passion or prejudice not shown

(1) In an action for the death of a railroad conductor caused by a rear-end collision, record was held not to show that the amount of the verdict was the result of passion, sympathy, or prejudice on the part of the jury, and contrary to the weight and preponderance of the evidence, the jury having found the deceased also negligent.

Tex.—St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. McLean, Civ.App., 241 S.W. 1072, reversed on other grounds, Com. App., 253 S.W. 248.

(2) In a personal injury action, the finding of the jury that plaintiff sustained no damages, was held not to show prejudice against plaintiff requiring reversal, although the evidence showed serious injury to plaintiff, where the jury had previously found that plaintiff was not injured while traveling on a mission for defendant, and that injuries were received in an unavoidable accident.

Rule of uniformity

On appeal by plaintiff claiming that verdict in a personal injury action is inadequate and the result of passion and prejudice, the "rule of uniformity" may be used in a proper case.

dict is supported by no evidence at all.[60] Further, it is said that, where a verdict for personal injuries is largely below the average, it is fair to infer, unless the case presents extraordinary features, that partiality, prejudice, or other improper motive influenced the jury and justifies the setting aside of the verdict.[61]

§ 1653. Approval or Disapproval of Trial Court

a. Approval of verdict
b. Disapproval of verdict

a. Approval of Verdict

(1) Effect in general
(2) Verdict against weight of evidence
(3) Verdict based on conflicting evidence
(4) When verdict set aside

(1) Effect in General

Ordinarily, the direct supervision of verdicts is in the sound discretion of the trial court and is not reviewable on appeal; and a verdict approved by the trial court, if without legal error and supported by the evidence, is conclusive on appeal.

Ordinarily, a question as to the credibility, weight, and value of the evidence is primarily for the jury, as discussed supra § 1649, and secondarily for the trial court, and, in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion, is not, on appeal, a matter for review.[61.50] In the absence of some imputed error of law or legal inference arising in connection therewith, the direct supervision of verdicts is in the sound discretion of the trial court, and is not reviewable on appeal.[61.55] The fact that the trial court deliberately considered the evidence before judgment and approved the verdict is always a circumstance of great weight in determining whether a verdict shall be set aside on appeal for insufficiency of the evidence to support it, and in cases of doubt this circumstance will always be of controlling weight.[62] In accordance with this principle the general rule is well set-

Kan.—Martin Realty Co. v. Garver, 229 P. 70, 116 Kan. 689.

Statutory restriction inapplicable
The right of plaintiff to secure review of judgment because of insufficiency of damages is not affected by the statute providing for disallowance of new trial on account of smallness of damages, where the amount of verdict was less than pecuniary damages actually incurred, as measured by the correct rule for their ascertainment.

4 C.J. p 864 note 34.

Ample evidence

(1) Where there was ample evidence to authorize the jury to find that plaintiff's property was destroyed by fire caused by burning sparks emitted from defendant's locomotive, and to find that presumption of defendant's negligence, arising on proof that fire was so caused, had not been completely rebutted by defendant's evidence, and such findings were approved by the trial judge, the court of appeals cannot interfere.
Ga.—Atlanta, B. & A. Ry. Co. v. McRae, 101 S.E. 587, 24 Ga.App. 537.

(2) Where the evidence presented only a fact issue, the verdict of the jury, amply supported by the evidence, and approved by the trial court, must be affirmed.
Ga.—Davis v. Davis, 33 S.E.2d 429, 199 Ga. 149.
Ind.—New York Cent. R. Co. v. Millhiser, 106 N.E.2d 453, 231 Ind. 180 rehearing denied 108 N.E.2d 57, 231 Ind. 180.

Different verdict not justifiable

After new trial is denied, the appellate court will not disturb the verdict for insufficiency of evidence, where a different verdict could not justifiably have been directed.
S.D.—Meylink v. Minnehaha Co-op. Oil Co., 291 N.W. 572, 67 S.D. 187—Wolff v. Stenger, 239 N.W. 181, 59 S.D. 231.

Evidence supporting verdict either way

(1) Where the evidence would have supported a verdict for either plaintiff or defendant, the jury's finding for plaintiff, approved by the trial judge, could not be controlled.
Ga.—Young v. Standard Lumber Co., 99 S.E. 138, 23 Ga.App. 639.

(2) Where different minds might reasonably have drawn different conclusions from the evidence on the issues in an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U.S.Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665), the jury's findings approved by the trial court will not be disturbed.
Kan.—Thompson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 177 P. 536, 104 Kan. 116.

Reasonable support

(1) The supreme court should not overthrow the determination of the judge and jury if, in any reasonable way, it may be considered to be sufficiently supported.
Wis.—Madison Trust Co. v. Hellecksen, 257 N.W. 691, 216 Wis. 443, 96 A.L.R. 992.

(2) A verdict which the evidence reasonably tends to support and which has been approved by the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal.

Remarks not indicating prejudice

Remarks of the trial court, in passing on a motion for a new trial, that it thought a certain remark of plaintiffs' counsel was very unfortunate, and that it must have had some effect upon the jury, and that ordinarily remarks of that sort react on the person making them, but that it did not in this case, in view of the verdict returned, were held not to warrant conclusion that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice.

sitting as a jury, would have rendered a different verdict will not authorize setting aside the verdict.[78]

Necessity and sufficiency of approval of verdict by trial court. There must be sufficient approval of the verdict by the trial court in order to preclude inquiry into the evidence by the appellate court,[78.5] and it has been held that a verdict in order to stand must have the independent approval of the trial court and if it does not have such approval the verdict should be set aside.[78.10] In this respect, the action of the trial judge in denying a motion for a new trial may constitute a sufficient approval of the verdict so as to give it persuasive force on appeal.[78.20] On the other hand, the appellate court

Action by appellate court

Trial judge has duty to grant new trial if he is not satisfied that evidence preponderates in favor of verdict and appellate court cannot act on motion for new trial until trial judge has in fact approved the verdict.

Accompanying remarks

(1) Where, in addition to trial judge's action in overruling motion for new trial, record reflects trial judge's observations made in disposing of motion, such observations may be looked to for purpose of determining whether overruling of motion in reality evidenced a satisfaction with verdict in sense that there was a decision of all questions necessary to be decided by trial judge made on a consideration of all pertinent factors.

(2) Where trial judge sees fit to approve verdict without giving reasons on motion for new trial, his satisfaction therewith is adequately indicated, but, if he comments on evidence, the court of appeals must determine whether trial judge has passed on the issues and is satisfied with verdict.

Tenn.—McLaughlin v. Broyles, 255 S.W.2d 1020, 36 Tenn.App. 391—Central Truckaway System v. Waltner, 253 S.W.2d 985, 36 Tenn. App. 202.

(3) An order denying a new trial, with an explanation that no legal question was involved such as required new trial in previous instance, showed the verdict was approved by the judge.

Ga.—Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Benton, 159 S.E. 717, 43 Ga.App. 495.

4 C.J. p 864 note 32 [d].

Denial of motion held not controlling

(1) While the denial of a motion for a new trial by the trial justice is entitled to, and is usually given much consideration on, appeal, it is not controlling where all that the justice was able to say as to the preponderance of the evidence was, "I cannot say that there was no basis for the jury's finding."

R.I.—Barrett v. Rhode Island Co., 116 A. 199, 44 R.I. 147.

(2) The trial justice's refusal to disturb the verdict on the ground that there was testimony on which it could be based, whether the court would reach the same conclusion or not, was disregarded, and the case was considered on the evidence alone by the supreme court, because of the uncertainty as to whether the trial justice approved the verdict.

may consider the evidence without giving persuasive force to the verdict where the trial judge did not properly perform his duty with respect to full and independent consideration of the evidence in passing on the motion for a new trial,[78.25] or where the opinion of the trial judge in approving or disapproving the verdict was not based on evidence or valid reason appearing in the record;[78.30] but in such circumstances the appellate court will not set the verdict aside unless the evidence strongly preponderates against it.[78.35]

(2) Verdict against Weight of Evidence

The determination of the jury as to the weight of the evidence, supported by the approval of the trial judge, must prevail on appeal and the appellate court may not disturb the verdict merely because it appears to be against the weight of the evidence.

As a general rule, the determination of the jury as to the weight of the evidence, supported by the approval of the trial judge, must prevail on appeal,[78.60] since an objection that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence is for the consideration of the trial court, not of the appellate tribunal;[79] and a verdict which has been approved

R.I.—Bell v. Weiner, 129 A. 339, 46 R.I. 478.

(3) A verdict in an action for personal injuries can have no weight on appeal, where the trial court overruled defendant's motion for a new trial, but thereafter rendered judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict, it being impossible to say that such verdict had the approval of the trial court.

Tenn.—Hamburger v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 196 S.W. 144, 138 Tenn. 123.

(4) Fact that judge who presided at trial did not pass on motion for new trial cannot affect appellate court's duty in determining sufficiency of evidence to support jury's verdict on appeal taken from judgment thereon after denial of such motion by special judge, who did not hear evidence, since rule of due deference to trial judge is not involved.

Language of equivocal nature

(1) Where the trial justice in ruling on motion for new trial used language of an equivocal nature, the supreme court could not give his decision the weight ordinarily accorded to a decision expressly approving or disapproving a verdict.

R.I.—Bradley v. Brayton, 199 A. 741, 61 R.I. 44.

(2) In personal injury action, approval of verdict for plaintiff by trial justice did not have persuasive force which such approval ordinarily would have, where motion for new trial was denied in a brief rescript without direct reference to important features or preponderance of evidence or credibility of witnesses.

Faulty recollection of evidence

Where record disclosed that justice's faulty recollection of certain testimony clearly affected his judgment, supreme court would examine the transcript of evidence without the assistance of trial justice's decision on motion for new trial.

Existence of sustaining evidence only question for appellate court

The court of appeals, having no power to interfere with the trial court's ruling against defendant on the weight of the evidence in overruling latter's motion for a new trial after the verdict for plaintiff, must accept plaintiff's version of the facts and consider only the question whether the verdict is supported by substantial testimony.

great weight of the evidence,[84.5] and if it determines that it is so, the verdict may be set aside, as discussed infra subdivision a (4) of this section.

(3) Verdict Based on Conflicting Evidence

Since conflicts in the evidence are to be resolved by the jury and trial court, a verdict based on conflicting evidence and approved by the trial court is ordinarily conclusive on appeal.

Ordinarily, conflicts in the evidence are to be resolved by the jury and trial court,[84.50] and the rule is broadly stated in a great number of decisions that the reviewing court will not disturb a verdict where the evidence was conflicting and the verdict was approved by the trial court.[85] Similar statements frequently met with are that a verdict on conflicting

(4) When Verdict Set Aside

A verdict may be reviewed and set aside on appeal, notwithstanding its approval by the trial court, where there is no evidence to support it or other circumstances so require.

While due consideration and weight will be given on appeal to the approval of a verdict by the trial court, the action of the trial judge may nevertheless be reviewed, and under certain circumstances it is the duty of the reviewing court to set aside the verdict and order a new trial.[92] Thus, notwithstanding the trial court's approval of the verdict it should be set aside where there is no evidence to sustain it,[93] or where the verdict is clearly and palpably against the great weight of the evidence,[94] especially when the weight of the evidence is reinforced by all the reasonable probabilities,[95] or where the verdict is imputable only to the prejudice or ignorance of the jury;[96] and an appellate court on reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict approved by the trial court on denying a motion to set it aside as contrary to the evidence must consider the physical facts contradicting the testimony of witnesses.[97]

So also it has been held that, where the trial court, after considering the testimony, expressed its opinion that it was against the weight of the evidence, but failed in its duty to set aside the verdict, a judgment thereon will be reversed,[98] and that the judg-

Dissatisfaction not shown

(1) The trial judge's statement, in overruling a motion for new trial, that the jury were as competent to pass on the cause of accident as he was, was held not to show dissatisfaction with the jury's verdict, where the judge further stated that he was satisfied with the jury's finding.
Tenn.—Union Traction Co. v. Todd, 64 S.W.2d 26, 16 Tenn.App. 200.

(2) The record was held not to show that the trial judge was dissatisfied with the verdict in an ac-ment should also be reversed where the trial judge in overruling a motion for new trial said that it was reluctantly overruled.[99]

b. Disapproval of Verdict

The action of the trial court in disapproving a verdict of the jury ordinarily will not be disturbed on appeal, especially if there is evidence to support a verdict other than the one rendered by the jury.

According to many decisions, a verdict disapproved by the trial judge is not entitled to the same weight as one which the trial judge has approved.[1] Hence it is generally held that where the trial court has exercised its discretion in setting aside a verdict on the ground that it is against the preponderance of the evidence or is not warranted by the evidence, its action will not be reviewed;[2] nor will its action in setting aside the verdict be disturbed where there is sufficient evidence on which to base a different verdict from the one rendered,[3] where there is not a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the verdict,[4] or unless the evidence plainly and palpably supports the verdict, or for errors of law, or where there is no basis in the evidence on which a verdict for the unsuccessful party could be permitted to stand.[5] However, the weight of the verdict, when there is evidence on which it can be based, in the absence of prejudice, partiality, or corruption, is not always overborne by the disapproval of the trial judge, and the reviewing court may regard itself bound by the conclusion of the jury, notwithstanding the disapproval of the trial court.[5.5]

Remittitur by appellate court. Where the trial court set aside a verdict as excessive, the appellate court will not reinstate it and order a remittitur.[6]

b. When set aside

a. When Sustained

The fact that the same verdict has been reached by several successive juries will usually preclude the appellate court from disturbing the last, at least where the evidence authorizes the verdict.

Since the law favors the termination of litigation when it can be done without violating some substantial right of the litigant,[6.50] it is generally the rule that, after two or more successive and concurrent verdicts, the appellate court will be strongly disinclined to interfere with the last verdict, and the findings under such circumstances are usually accepted as final,[7] especially where the trial court

Superior rule

Concurring verdicts rule is superior to the rule that decision of trial justice on motion for new trial will not be disturbed by reviewing court where evidence conflicts.

R.I.—Melucci v. De Cubellis, 12 A.2d 216, 64 R.I. 306.

No invariable number of verdicts is necessary before reviewing court may determine that "concurring verdicts rule" shall prevail, but, since the court and practice act, the rule has not been applied until after a third verdict, but whether the rule shall be applied after the third verdict rests entirely in the judgment of reviewing court.

R.I.—Melucci v. De Cubellis, supra.

Appellate court will have less hesitation in affirming a judgment where the case has been tried in two courts, and in both the findings of fact were against appellant.

Utah.—Callahan v. Simons, 228 P. 892, 64 Utah 250.

Careful consideration nevertheless

(1) Notwithstanding three successive verdicts for plaintiff in an action for death, a careful consideration of the trial evidence will not be omitted.

N.Y.—Schoonmaker v. Pittsburgh Contracting Co., 161 N.Y.S. 186, 176 App.Div. 48, reargument denied 161 N.Y.S. 1055, 176 App.Div. 55.

(2) Where case was remanded for new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence to support verdict, verdict of second jury in favor of same litigant would be entitled to fair consideration by supreme court hearing second appeal, even if jury acted on same evidence that was before supreme court on first appeal.

Miss.—Universal Truck Loading Co. v. Taylor, 172 So. 756, 178 Miss. 143.

Concurrence of verdicts entitled to weight

(1) That an action was tried three times, and each time the jury gave the same verdict, is entitled to great weight on a third appeal, in determining whether there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict.

N.Y.—Lyman v. Village of Potsdam, 198 N.Y.S. 526, 204 App.Div. 528.

4 C.J. p 867 note 67 [a].

(2) On appeal from order granting or denying motion for new trial for insufficiency of evidence, made after two or more trials, appellate court, in determining whether retrial would result in different verdict, can consider the number of trials, whether evidence on each trial was substantially the same, the number of verdicts, and the similarity of the provisions of each, the orders for new trial, and the grounds thereof.

Cal.—Whitfield v. De Brincat, 96 P. 2d 156, 35 C.A.2d 476.

Amount of verdict

(1) The assessment of damages by a jury on a second trial at about what the first jury allowed was sufficient alone to eliminate the conclusion that such amount evidenced passion and prejudice.

Iowa.—Porter v. Heishman, 169 N.W. 115, 184 Iowa 931.

(2) On a motion for new trial on ground of excessive damages appearing to have been given under influence of passion and prejudice, it was proper for court, on appeal, to consider fact that substantial verdicts had been rendered in a prior trial.

Last verdict

To warrant reviewing court in applying concurring verdicts rule in a case where it appears to reviewing court that parties have been given sufficient opportunity for a fair determination of disputed questions of fact, it is immaterial whether the last verdict was approved or disapproved by the trial justice.

Restriction applicable only to trial courts

A statute which provides that "no more than two new trials upon the same grounds shall be granted to the same party in the same cause" applies only to trial courts and does not prevent reviewing courts from reversing a judgment founded on a third verdict not warranted by the proof.

Ill.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Patterson, 93 Ill. 290.

Tri-City Ry. Co. v. Brennan, 108 Ill.App. 471—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Alsdurf, 68 Ill.App. 149.

In Kentucky

(1) Under a statute since repealed, where there had been three verdicts for the same party, the court would not disturb the third one on the ground that it was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence and not sustained thereby, where the same complaint was made against the first two verdicts and urged as grounds for setting them aside; and this, although the first two judgments were reversed or set aside for errors of law.

Ky.—Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Byars, 67 S.W.2d 497, 252 Ky. 507, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 633, 292 U.S. 629, 78 L.Ed. 1483—Commonwealth Life Ins. Co. v. Goodnight's Adm'r, 32 S.W.2d 25, 235 Ky. 699—Cumberland R. Co. v. Girdner, 212 S.W. 105, 184 Ky. 375.

4 C.J. p 867 note 67 [e] (1).

(2) This statute was held to be not unconstitutional.

Ky.—Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Byars, supra.

(3) The rule under the statute obtained although either one or both of the first two verdicts were set aside for errors of law.

Ky.—Cumberland R. Co. v. Girdner, 212 S.W. 105, 184 Ky. 375.

4 C.J. p 867 note 67 [e] (2).

(4) However, there had to be three verdicts; if there were three trials, but the jury in one of them failed to agree, the trial in which there was not a verdict was not considered as one of the verdicts within the meaning of the statute.

Ky.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, 115 S.W. 804, 1198, 131 Ky. 689.

4 C.J. p 867 note 67 [e] (3).

(5) The statute, however, did not bar an assignment of insufficiency of evidence on a fifth appeal of a case where the former appeals had not determined the question as to sufficiency of evidence to support the verdict.

Ky.—Black Mountain Corporation v. Partin's Adm'r, 86 S.W.2d 676, 260 Ky. 680.

(6) Nor did it limit the right of the reviewing court to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial where errors of law had been committed to the prejudice of the party appealing.

Ky.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, supra.

(7) It did not preclude the granting of any number of new trials for errors of law in giving instructions and admitting incompetent evidence.

Ky.—Bardstown v. Nelson County, 90 S.W. 246, 121 Ky. 737, 28 Ky.L. 710.

(8) Nor did it limit the right to grant a new trial where the verdict was so excessive as to make it plain that it was given under the influence of passion or prejudice.

Ky.—Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. McCoy, 97 S.W.2d 571, 265 Ky. 653—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, supra.

(9) So in accordance with the general rule a second verdict could be set aside because flagrantly against the evidence, as the statute merely provided that no more than two new trials could be granted on that ground.

Ky.—Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Martin, 157 S.W. 710, 154 Ky. 348.

(10) Statute providing that not more than two trials should be awarded for insufficiency of evidence was merely declaratory of rule prevailing when statute became effective, as to the effect to be given three similar verdicts rendered on a given state of facts; and the repeal of the statute, while expressive of legislative will that court of appeals exercise its inherent power to prevent wrong and oppression, does not prevent court from giving great weight to the finding of three successive juries on an issue submitted for their determination under instructions.

Ky.—Polley v. Cline, 134 S.W.2d 631, 280 Ky. 773.

In Ohio

(1) A statute which provides that "'the same court shall not grant more than one new trial on the weight of the evidence against the same party in the same case,' has special and exclusive application to trial courts, and such provision does not operate as a limitation upon the power of the circuit court, as a court of error, to reverse a case any number of times, on the ground that the verdict of the jury in the trial court was against the case on the weight of the evidence."

Ohio.—Columbus St. R. Co. v. Pace, 67 N.E. 490, 68 Ohio St. 200.

"To take this course," it has been said, "is not to weakly permit or to approve the doing of a wrong in the name of justice, but is to recognize the proper functions of the court and the jury, and, after exercising due caution to prevent injustice, places the determination of disputed questions of fact in the tribunal provided by our constitution and laws."[12] This principle has been applied where the evidence authorizes the verdict;[13] where the evidence is conflicting;[14] where there is evidence sufficient to go to the jury;[15] where there is any evidence to sustain the verdict,[16] although meager and unsatisfactory[17] and such as would have authorized a different finding,[18] although the verdict is against the preponderance of the evidence,[19] although the reviewing court would have reached a different conclusion on the evidence,[20] and although the trial court granted a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence.[21]

Similar statements are that the verdict should not be set aside unless without any support in the evidence;[22] unless decidedly or flagrantly against the evidence;[23] unless the evidence is manifestly

(2) However, it has been held that another statute, denying the right of the same court to grant more than one reversal in favor of the same party in the same cause of action, on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, applies in the circuit court where the judgment to be reviewed was rendered and the proceedings in error were brought after its enactment.
Ohio.—Sidney v. Schmidt, 33 Ohio Cir.Ct. 128.

(3) In view of this latter statute the court of appeals cannot weigh evidence on an appeal from a second trial by a party where the verdict against him at the first trial was set aside as against the evidence.
Ohio.—Rolf v. Heil, 148 N.E. 398, 113 Ohio St. 113—Cleveland Ry. Co. v. Trendel, 128 N.E. 136, 101 Ohio St. 316.

(4) Although a statute precludes the trial court, which has granted one new trial on the weight of evidence, from granting a second new trial on the same ground, the court of appeals has power to determine whether the verdict on the second trial was against the weight of evidence.
Ohio.—Werner v. Rowley, 193 N.E. 623, 129 Ohio St. 15.
Bond Stores v. Miller, 197 N.E. 369, 49 Ohio App. 470.

(5) A court of appeals having once reversed a case on the weight of the evidence is not prohibited by the statute again to pronounce judgment of reversal on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; but, where it requires the weighing of evidence to determine whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, it becomes a question of fact, and the provisions of such section apply.
Ohio.—McMurtrie v. Wheeling Traction Co., 140 N.E. 636, 107 Ohio St. 107.

(6) The provision of statute that the same court shall not grant more than one judgment of reversal on the weight of the evidence, refers to another provision, providing that a new trial may be granted because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and not to a provision that a new trial may be granted on the ground of excessive damages given under the influence of passion and prejudice.
Ohio.—Waldron v. New York Cent. Ry. Co., 140 N.E. 161, 106 Ohio St. 371, followed in State ex rel. Niederlehner v. Ryan, 185 N.E. 882, 125 Ohio St. 635.

(7) The statute providing that the same court shall not grant more than one reversal on the weight of evidence, does not preclude the court of appeals from reversing a judgment upon finding that the verdict upon which it is based is excessive, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice, although a former judgment in the same case had previously been reversed because the verdict was against the weight of the evidence.
Ohio.—Waldron v. New York Cent. Ry. Co., 140 N.E. 161, 106 Ohio St. 371, followed in State ex rel. Niederlehner v. Ryan, 185 N.E. 882, 125 Ohio St. 635.

Strong case

Generally, after two or more trials resulting in like verdicts of different juries appellate court will not reverse judgment on last verdict for and clearly insufficient to support the verdict;[24] unless the preponderance of the evidence is so great as to warrant the conclusion that the verdict was unjust or produced by improper influences,[25] or was the result of passion or of prejudice;[26] unless there is a reasonable probability of a different outcome;[27] unless some error of law has been committed;[28] or unless error is so clear as fully to demonstrate that a failure of justice will occur if the appellate court does not again interfere.[28.5]

Limitations of rule. Nevertheless the virtue ascribed to a subsequent concurring verdict is confined to the effect of the determination by the jury of the weight of the conflicting evidence and does not extend to questions of law arising from the admitted or uncontroverted facts of a case.[29] Also the rule that, where a plaintiff on two successive trials has secured verdicts which have been set aside for the insufficiency of the evidence, a verdict in his favor on a third trial, which the trial court refused to set aside, will not ordinarily be set aside on that ground on appeal, cannot be invoked in a case where the second and third trials were based on the record of the first trial, with the addition of plaintiff's own testimony on the third trial, since in such case the jury and the trial judge are in no better position to judge of the credibility of the witnesses than is the court of review.[30]

Verdicts differing from prior verdicts. A verdict differing from those rendered by prior juries in the same case receives no support from such verdicts and must be treated as one of first instance;[31] but the mere fact that several juries reached different conclusions on substantially the same evidence is no reason why the last verdict should not stand,[32] and it will not be disturbed[33] unless clearly shown to have been actuated by passion or prejudice.[34]

b. When Set Aside

Although a number of prior juries have in the same case rendered similar verdicts, the appellate court may in a proper case set aside the last of such verdicts, except as statutes may prevent.

Passion or prejudice not shown
(1) Where four different juries have held defendant liable for trespass, and little defense is made, and no evidence of misconduct or error is shown, an excessive allowance of exemplary damages is not ground for a reversal or new trial, as showing passion or prejudice of the jury.

(2) Where there was substantial evidence to support facts on which plaintiff relied for recovery, and two juries had rendered verdicts each for ten thousand dollars, and defendant assigned no error to the overruling of its demurrer to the evidence, a verdict of the named amount for the crushing off of an arm cannot be held to be so against the weight of evidence as to indicate passion and prejudice.

(1) Two thousand dollars for the breaking of both bones of a leg about half an inch above the ankle, resulting in impairment of the function of the ankle, which will probably result in a flattened foot, will not be held excessive, the jury on the first trial having fixed damages at three thousand dollars.

Except where a different rule is provided for by statute, as is discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the mere fact that several successive verdicts have been rendered for the same party will not prevent a reviewing court from setting aside the verdict.[35] Accordingly, such a verdict may be set aside where the trial judge has refused to order a new trial principally because prior juries had rendered similar verdicts;[36] and the reviewing court may also set aside the verdict where it is contrary to the evidence,[37] or is not supported by any evidence;[38] where it is clearly and palpably against the great weight of the evidence;[39] where it plainly indicates that it is the result of ignorance, prejudice, passion, or corruption;[40] where it is obviously excessive;[41] or where the record reveals errors of law[42] or shows that a fair trial was not had.[43]

§ 1655. Verdicts in Equity

Ordinarily, the appellate court will not regard as conclusive a jury verdict in an equity case, since it is merely advisory; but such a verdict will nevertheless be given weight and will not usually be disturbed unless clearly wrong.

Except where the rule has been changed by statute, a verdict rendered on submission of issues in a chancery case to a jury is generally held to be merely advisory, and not binding either on the chancellor or on the appellate court, and the appellate court will examine the evidence to determine whether the decree is sufficiently supported[44] and this is

First trial replete with error
While a second verdict will often be allowed to stand on the same evidence on which the court set aside a similar verdict, this does not apply where the first trial was replete with error, as the appellate court cannot say that the two juries have come to the same conclusion on the same facts.

Insufficiency of evidence as matter of law
That four verdicts at the trial terms, sustained by the trial judge, have been rendered for plaintiff does not prevent the court, on appeal from the judgment on the last verdict, from setting it aside on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence as a matter of law.

so notwithstanding the chancellor has adopted the verdict or findings of the jury.[45]

Nevertheless the rule that the weight of evidence is in the province of the court and jury and that the appellate court will not interfere except where the verdict is the result of a gross disregard of the evidence is much deferred to even in equity trials,[46] and where the verdict has been approved and the findings adopted by the chancellor, the decree will not be reversed unless it clearly appears to be erroneous.[47] Furthermore in some jurisdictions a verdict in such cases is given the same force as a verdict of a properly instructed jury at law;[48] and, if the findings are not objected to by motion for a new trial or set aside by the court, they become established facts and cannot be questioned on appeal.[49] So where, as under a code practice, all trials assume the features of trials at law, it has been held that the appellate court accepts the verdict of a jury as generally conclusive on the facts.[50]

As the verdict of the jury is advisory only, if the chancellor sets it aside and makes findings of his own, his decree will not ordinarily be reversed,[51] especially if supported by the evidence.[52] The appellate court will not weigh evidence to determine whether it preponderates in favor of the findings of the court or the verdict of the jury.[53] Clear and palpable error must appear to justify a reversal.[54]

3. Findings of Court

§ 1656(1). Conclusiveness in General

Except as a different holding may be required by statute or rule of court, fact findings of the trial court in a case tried without a jury are given the same effect on appeal as jury verdicts, and, if supported by the evidence and free from legal error, are generally regarded as conclusive and binding on the appellate court.

Particular statutes construed

(1) Burns St.Annot.1914, § 698, requiring the appellate court, in all cases not triable by jury, to consider and weigh the evidence and admissions heard in the trial, does not require such court to weigh the evidence in passing upon its sufficiency to support the verdict of the jury or findings of the court.

Ind.—Dannhauer v. Young, 122 N.E. 589, 73 Ind.App. 651.

(2) Under Remington Comp.St. § 1736, providing that in an action tried by the court without a jury, wherein a statement of facts or bill of exceptions shall have been certified, the evidence of facts shown by such bill of exceptions or statement of facts shall be examined by the supreme court de novo, so far as the findings of fact or refusal to make findings based thereon shall have been excepted to, the supreme court is not concluded by the findings of the trial court.

Mullins, 151 P. 811, 87 Wash. 403—Cornwall v. Anderson, 148 P. 1, 85 Wash. 369.

(3) Latter statute does not contemplate that supreme court should examine evidence incorporated into statement of facts and pass on its weight without considering or referring to decision of trial court, or other means afforded by trial court for deciding fact questions.

Wash.—Darnell v. Noel, 208 P.2d 1194, 34 Wash.2d 428.

(4) Where by virtue of a statute actions at law tried before a court sitting without a jury are reviewable on both the law and the evidence in accordance with the rules discussed supra § 1457, the appellate court is not bound by the findings made by the trial court.

Construction and application of rules

(1) Under a court rule providing that upon appeal from a judgment in a nonjury law case the supreme court shall act according to the practice in equity cases, the supreme court is not bound by the findings or lack of findings of the trial court, but instead will consider the record as a whole and determine such questions raised by the appeal as are necessary to decision.

correct the findings of the trial court in any material respect,[60] particularly when they are admitted by appellant to be correct.[61]

The vital considerations which appear to afford the basis or reasons for the above rule are the fundamental distinction between the respective provinces of trial and appellate courts in that the former is the trier of the facts while the latter deals with questions of law solely,[62] and the fact that the position of the trial court for the purpose of determining factual questions is vastly superior to that of the appellate court in that the former usually has the opportunity to observe and hear the witnesses and parties and obtain the benefit of many points and matters that cannot possibly be brought before the appellate court for its consideration by way of a printed record.[63]

4 C.J. p 885 note 39.

So strong are these considerations that when they are present it has even been held that the conclusive effect is to be given to the fact findings of the trial court notwithstanding a statute providing that the appellate court shall review with no presumption in favor of the findings of fact by the trial court,[64] or a statute providing that the appellate court may make findings of fact contrary to, or in addition to, those made by the trial court.[65]

On the other hand, the rule that the appellate court is concluded by the findings of the trial court should not be followed blindly and without exception;[65.5] and, where the trial court does not see and hear the witnesses, the view is sometimes taken that the trial court is in no better position to pass on the facts than the appellate court and that the latter has the power to review the fact findings.[66]

§ 1656(2). —— Scope of Review Generally

The appellate court will not ordinarily review or retry facts found by the trial court, the weight to be given to the evidence and the final determination of the facts being considered as resting within the exclusive province of the trial court when it has lawfully undertaken to function as the trier of the facts.

Where the issue before the appellate court is one of fact and the testimony was taken orally before the trial court, the well known rules of review must obtain.[66.50] As a general rule, after they have been found by the trial court, the appellate court will not review or retry the facts.[67] The credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to the evidence are matters within the province of the trial court,[68] and the appellate court will not seek to weigh the evidence or pass on the credibility of wit-

Findings against weight of evidence see infra § 1658.

Resolving conflicts in evidence see infra § 1657.

Reconciliation of testimony

It is within the province of the trial court to reconcile testimony.

Ind.—Greis v. Herbert, 27 N.E.2d 924, 108 Ind.App. 369.

Acceptance of sole witness' testimony by trial court

(1) A trial court may base its judgment on the testimony of one witness against that of several, if it is of sufficient weight to force the conviction of truth to reasonable minds, and the appellate court is without power to enforce a contrary opinion by reversing the judgment.

Nev.—McNee v. McNee, 237 P. 534, 49 Nev. 90.

(2) The appellate court cannot declare an act established by evidence as a matter of law when such fact is specifically denied by the only witness who testifies on subject, and his testimony is accepted by the trial court.

Appellate court as not concerned with preponderance of evidence generally see infra § 1658.

Not required to analyze testimony

Appellate court was not required to analyze the testimony taken ore tenus before trial judge in action tried to the court without a jury.

Ala.—Gulf, M. & O. R. R. v. Berman Bros. Iron & Metal Co., 30 So.2d 446, 249 Ala. 159.

Matters of substance, not credibility, considered

An appellate court, as matter of law, passes on matters of substance, not credibility of evidence, and may say that particular evidence is substantial, if triers of facts believed it to be true.

Mo.—State ex rel. Rice v. Public Service Commission, 220 S.W.2d 61, 359 Mo. 109.

a presumption[70] or the burden of proof,[71] or overcome a prima facie case;[72] nor will proof of a fact be supplied by conjecture on an appeal.[72.5] Furthermore, the appellate court does not perform the functions of an expert accountant.[72.10]

Such matters and the final determination of the facts are considered as resting within the exclusive province of the trial court when it has lawfully undertaken to function as the trier of the facts.[73] Indeed, if by constitution the jurisdiction of the ap-change or retry the trial court's findings because of the weight of the evidence or the lower court's failure to give credit to certain testimony.[74]

The only question or inquiry before the appellate court for review with reference to the fact findings of the trial court is whether or not they are for some reason erroneous or wrong as a matter of law;[75] but for such errors the findings are subject to review and correction by the appellate court the same as are the findings of the jury.[76]

If, because of ambiguous phraseology, it becomes necessary for the appellate court to construe special findings of the trial court to see whether they support the ultimate conclusion reached, the appellate court will limit the scope of its inquiry to the ascertainment of the ultimate facts actually found by the trial court,[77] and will construe the findings broadly rather than narrowly or technically.[78]

§ 1656(3). —— Reversal and Affirmance in General

The appellate court is extremely reluctant to disagree with the fact findings of the trial judge, and such findings will not ordinarily be disturbed if they are not clearly, plainly, palpably, or manifestly wrong or erroneous.

Although the usual importance and weight which attach to his findings of fact are diminished where the trial judge has excluded competent evidence,[78.50] or has made statements showing that he was in doubt concerning the matter,[78.55] or where the judgment was not rendered until nearly a year after trial, at a time when the testimony had not yet been transcribed,[78.60] the findings will never be lightly disturbed by the appellate court even when they are being reviewed on the grounds that they are insufficiently supported or are erroneous as a matter of law.[79] When facts are involved, the appellate

Same in law as in chancery

Where trial court hears evidence without a jury, the force of trial court's findings are the same regardless whether case is considered as one in chancery or law.
Ill.—Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Guild, 68 N.E.2d 615, 329 Ill.App. 374.

Circumstances shown by record considered

Nature of the evidence and other pertinent facts and circumstances as shown by the record may be considered by the appellate court in determining in each case how much weight should be given to findings or decree of the trial court in determining whether such findings or decree is, or is not, erroneous.

mind of the appellate court as to their propriety or correctness.[85]

Although the mere presence in the record of substantial evidence to sustain the decree or judgment appealed from is not enough to justify an affirmance,[85.5] the appellate court will usually affirm if examination discloses that there has been no violation of the rules of law governing the case,[86] or the rules of logic pertaining to proper inferences and deductions,[87] and the findings are not wholly or totally without support in the evidence,[88]

When findings contrary to undisputed evidence sustainable

(1) Findings contrary to the undisputed evidence are sustainable only where the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to support different findings.
Cal.—Jewett v. Albin, 266 P. 329, 90 C.A. 535.

(2) If the trial court is not justified in wholly disregarding undisputed testimony, its findings contrary thereto will be set aside.
Wis.—Bradley v. Selden, 228 N.W. 494, 201 Wis. 61.

(3) Where the evidence is all one way, and is not immaterial, irrelevant, improbable, inconsistent, contradicted, or discredited, it cannot be disregarded or ignored by the judge, and if he makes a finding which is contrary to the evidence, an error results, for which the decision must be set aside.

fied by the evidence that the interests of justice necessitate their nullification.[98.5]

So, error at law requiring reversal may exist where the findings or conclusions are due to, or colored by, an error or misconception of law,[99] or a capricious disbelief in the disposition of the case,[99.5] or are clearly the result of passion or prejudice,[1] prejudgment of the case,[1.5] or an abuse of discretion,[2] on the part of the trial judge. Furthermore, the judgment should be reversed if the facts found by the court, supplemented by those he should have found, will support a judgment for appellant.[2.5]

Apparent inconsistencies in the findings will not cause a reversal if they are susceptible of reconciliation with one another and with the judgment.[3]

Error in excluding competent evidence

(1) The rule against reversal of the judgment of the trial court sitting without a jury, if sustained by legal evidence, does not apply where the court has erroneously excluded competent evidence.

Mass.—Vergnani v. Guidetti, 32 N.E. 2d 272, 308 Mass. 450.

(2) If the trial judge, being of the erroneous opinion that certain evidence is inadmissible, admits it only for the purpose of making a record on appeal and does not consider it in making his findings, the appellate court is at liberty to disregard them.
Or.—Witt v. Campbell-Lakin Segar Co., 134 P. 316, 66 Or. 144.

Overlooking of important evidence

If a trial justice's decision is based on a misconception or an overlooking of important evidence, or on a misconception of law applicable to evidence, decision will be set aside by appellate court.
R.I.—Moschetti v. De Cubellis, 20 A. 2d 253, 66 R.I. 463.

Construction of constitutional or statutory provisions

(1) Where question presented before reviewing court is a question of statutory construction, the reviewing court is not bound by the finding of the trial court.

Mental balance of court unsettled

Even though the judgment is not manifestly against the weight of evidence and notwithstanding the judge had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses, the judgment will be reversed where the record indicates that scenes of disorder among the counsel and between the court and counsel were such as to have unsettled the mental balance of the court.

§ 1656(4). —— Waiver of Jury or Request for Findings

Findings of the trial court have the force of a jury verdict where the parties have waived the jury, but a request or waiver is not necessary to make the findings binding if the trial court otherwise has authority to try the facts.

Where a trial by jury is waived and the case is tried to the court with the consent of the parties, the findings of the court have the force and effect of a jury verdict;[4] but the absence of a request for declarations of law or findings of fact does not deprive the findings of the trial court of the effect

Effect of statutes or rules requiring review of evidence in action tried before court sitting without jury see supra § 1656(1).

Trial of equity case to law court

Although an action should have been tried on the equity side of the court, if the cause is actually tendered to the court sitting on the law side, and a jury waived, the findings of the court will be accorded conclusiveness of a verdict of a jury.

Iowa.—Turner v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 172 N.W. 166, 185 Iowa 1363.

which would otherwise be accorded them;[5] and the findings are given the same weight where the law of its own force makes the trial judge the trier of the facts, as where the right to a jury has been waived,[6] or the court has discharged the jury on its own motion without exception being taken by the parties.[7]

Submission to judge after disagreement of jury. If the case has first been submitted to a jury who have disagreed and then submitted to the trial judge, the findings of the judge upon the same testimony as was submitted to the jury are not accorded the same weight that they would otherwise have had.[8]

§ 1656(5). —— Refusals to Find and Findings Not Strictly of Fact or Formally Expressed

Although there is some authority to the contrary, findings on mixed questions of law and fact and implied findings have been held within the general rule giving conclusive effect to the findings of the trial court on appeal.

Findings on mixed questions of law and fact have been held within the general rule giving conclusive effect to the findings of the trial court on appeal,[9] and so have implied findings of fact made by a trial court in support of its judgment.[10] Even though a finding of fact appears in the conclusions of law, it is entitled to the weight usually given a finding of fact.[10.5] As to mixed questions of law and fact, which are so interwoven that it is impossible to review the trial court's legal conclusions without reviewing its fact findings, however, there is some authority to the contrary.[11] Moreover, it has been held that where a trial judge fails to make an express finding on an important issue, the finding

General finding

A general finding in favor of one party or another is a finding of every special fact necessary to sustain it and conclusive as to such facts, if there is evidence to support a finding of their existence.

implied in his decision on such issue lacks the persuasive force that it would otherwise have.[11.5]

Refusal to find. Where a refusal to find facts involves the weighing of evidence, it is as conclusive on appeal as affirmative findings;[12] and error of the court in not making an additional finding will not cause a reversal if the judgment is supported by sufficient unattacked controlling facts included in the court's findings;[13] although, where special findings have been requested and refused, the appellate court may review the evidence to see if it is such as imposed upon the trial court the duty to grant the request for special findings.[14]

An oral opinion rendered by the trial court, giving the reasons for its decision, does not amount to a judicial finding of facts, nor have any legal effect as such.[15]

§ 1656(6). —— When or by Whom Findings Made or Prepared

Findings made following the sustaining of a demurrer to the evidence, and concurrent findings made by two or more courts, are entitled to great weight; but less weight is usually accorded to findings prepared by a judge in vacation, or by a person other than the judge who took the evidence.

Findings of fact made following the sustaining of a demurrer to the evidence have the same force and effect as findings made by the court after weighing the evidence in a case submitted for decision on the testimony of both parties.[15.50] If there have been concurrent findings of fact on the same question by two or more courts below, the appellate court will be particularly reluctant to disturb the findings.[16]

The same weight and standing ordinarily accorded to findings of fact made by the trial court are not attributed to findings prepared by counsel for the prevailing party;[17] findings of a trial judge in proceedings had in vacation rather than when the court was in session;[18] nor, according to some authority, to findings made by a judge other than the one who took the evidence;[19] but other cases have held that the fact that one judge hears the evidence and another decides the case on the transcript thereof does not lessen the effect to be given to the findings on appeal.[20] Furthermore, if the transcript of the evidence taken before another judge forms only a partial basis for the fact findings in that the judge making the findings considers not only the transcript but also all the evidence in the cause, including evidence taken before him and an authorized examination of the premises involved, the appellate court will not weigh the evidence or review the facts.[21]

§ 1656(7). —— Jurisdictional Facts

Findings of facts relating to the trial court's jurisdiction will be reviewed, and must be fairly sustained by the evidence.

The general rule preventing the appellate court from reviewing the facts applies only to the review of the trial of the merits of the case, and where the review is of the decision of the trial court on the question of jurisdiction, the reviewing court will examine the evidence of the facts bearing on that question;[22] and on such facts there must be enough testimony fairly to sustain the trial court's findings.[23]

§ 1656(8). —— Conclusions or Inferences from Facts or Undisputed Evidence

The appellate court is not bound by the conclusions or inferences drawn by the trial court from the facts found, and will review to determine whether the findings made support the judgment rendered or the ultimate conclusion drawn.

While it is the province of the trial court to draw reasonable inferences from the facts established,[23.50] the appellate court is not bound by the conclusions or inferences the trial court draws from the facts found,[23.55] and, in the absence of statutes providing otherwise, the appellate court will always review to determine whether the findings made support the judgment rendered, or the ultimate conclusion drawn.[24] For the conclusions of the trial court to stand they must find support in the subordinate facts.[25]

Conclusions or ultimate findings are subject to review and correction where they have been reached by way of deduction or inference from probative or subordinate facts,[26] or admitted undisputed facts,[27] or where the findings are deduced or inferred

Finding must oppose only reasonable inference
The appellate court cannot say that an ultimate fact is improperly inferred from evidentiary facts unless the finding is opposed to the only inference that can reasonably be drawn from such evidentiary facts.

pears that they either involve the application of some erroneous rule of law material to the case or are unreasonably drawn from the facts found.[33.5]

Moreover, if findings stated as conclusions are obviously not merely deductions from other facts found but are based on all the evidence in the case, they are not reviewable as conclusions or deductions from a finding of subordinate facts;[34] and the mere fact that some of the probative facts do not support the ultimate fact found by the trial court will not cause the ultimate fact to be disregarded by the appellate court.[35] So a judgment based on formal findings of fact and conclusions of law will not be reversed where there is a finding which conflicts with the judgment, unless there is evidence in the record to sustain the conflicting finding.[35.5] Subsidiary findings are not to be added to the evidence in considering exceptions to the refusal of rulings seasonably requested by plaintiff that on all the evidence plaintiff is entitled to recover where a general finding for defendant does not purport to be a mere conclusion from the subsidiary facts expressly found but may rest in part on other findings on all the evidence.[35.10]

Finding based on undisputed evidence. The rule that the appellate court is concluded by the findings of the trial court is usually applicable only where there is conflicting evidence.[35.15] When the evidence on which the findings of the trial court are based is undisputed, the question of whether the evidence sustains or justifies the findings is generally regarded as a question of law open to consideration by the appellate court which is not bound by the findings under such circumstances.[36] While the appellate court, as a general rule, has no power to add to a special finding of facts, it may give heed to a fact appearing in the evidence which does not admit of dispute, in order to uphold the judgment;[36.5] and if the undisputed evidence supports the findings, they will not be disturbed.[37]

Contradictory findings

Where trial court made two contradictory findings, appellate court may examine evidence to determine which finding was supported.

Conn.—O'Connell v. Brady, 72 A.2d 493, 136 Conn. 475.

if it is found that the findings are unsupported by the evidence, a reversal will result.

In connection with the above question the appellate court's function is limited to an examination of the record to ascertain if sufficient evidence exists to justify the findings.[40] If this is found, the examination of the appellate court ceases.[41] It will give no regard to rules as to the sufficiency of evidence to establish a state of facts contrary to those found,[42] nor will it, in accordance with the rule stated infra § 1658, concern itself with the question of where the preponderance of the evidence may lie, although, if the preponderance of the evidence supports the findings, it is even more clear that they should not be disturbed.[43]

The appellate court in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings will indulge in every presumption in their favor,[44] and give due weight to the trial court's superior advantages in passing on the facts,[45] and judging the credibility of the witnesses.[46] When considering whether the findings have proper evidentiary support, the appellate court will eliminate from consideration all incompetent and immaterial evidence,[47] and consider only the evidence most favorable to the successful party,[48] including all reasonable inferences which might have been drawn therefrom,[49] which will be

Question of law

Sufficiency of evidence to support finding of trial court is question of law.

4 C.J. p 878 note 82—60 C.J. p 1131 note 92.

Meaning of "substantial evidence"

(1) "The term 'substantial evidence' is not used in the sense of reliability, but rather in contradistinction to the term 'scintilla of evidence.'"

U.S.—U. S. v. Tyrakowski, C.C.A.Ill., 50 F.2d 766, 770.

(2) Evidence is "substantial evidence" if reasonable men all agree, or if reasonable men may fairly differ as to whether the evidence establishes the facts found, and term may also be defined as evidence of substance, which establishes facts and from which reasonable inferences may be drawn.

N.M.—Brown v. Cobb, 294 P.2d 264, 53 N.M. 169.

Negative character of substantial evidence does not prevent it from being sufficient to sustain the trial court's fact findings.

Idaho.—Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 237 P. 281, 41 Idaho 4.

Special finding of the court sitting without a jury will not be disturbed on appeal if the finding is supported by any substantial evidence in the whole record, including inferences of fact legitimately deducible therefrom.

Mo.—Broyles v. Achor, App., 78 S.W. 2d 459.

As against presumption

Where ultimate fact in case is found from substantial evidence, it cannot be said as matter of law that any presumption will prevail.

74.5 Utah.—Paulsen v. Coombs, 253 P.2d 621—Northcrest, Inc. v. Walker Bank & Trust Co., 248 P.2d 692, 122 Utah 268.

The appellate court will not refuse to sustain the findings because the supporting evidence is somewhat weak and unsatisfactory,[75] or vague and uncertain,[76] or consists of competent opinions and conclusions of witnesses;[77] and the testimony of only one witness may be sufficient to support the findings.[78]

Credibility of the witnesses is, as noted supra § 1656(2), a thing with which the appellate court will not ordinarily concern itself, and seldom will the findings be disturbed for interest or lack of credibility of the witnesses if, when assuming their testimony to be the truth, it adequately supports the findings;[79] but, like all other rules, this one has its limitations or qualifications in that the appellate court will reject, or refuse to consider the findings as supported by, evidence which is inherently improbable,[80] or so contrary to the physical facts that it cannot be true.[81]

To justify the appellate court in refusing to regard supporting evidence as sufficient because of inherent improbability there must be either a physical impossibility or the evidence must set forth such a state of facts that nothing need be assumed or inferred to convince the ordinary mind that the story is false,[82] and the mere existence of suspicious circumstances reflecting on the testimony on which the findings are based will not cause them to be rejected by the appellate court.[83]

Effect of burden of proof on sufficiency of evidence. Findings adverse to the party having the burden of proving a fact must be sustained in the absence of evidence of the fact.[83.5] Findings adverse to the party having the burden of proof will not be disturbed unless the evidence is sufficiently convincing to warrant the appellate court in substituting a finding for the finding of not proven made by the trial court,[83.10] or unless the record shows that the party has so clearly established his case that it would be unreasonable to find otherwise,[84]

and as to make the rendition of a judgment in his favor practically imperative;[85] and the question is not whether the evidence was such as to permit recovery, but whether it was so conclusive as to compel recovery.[85.5] If a case is thus clearly proved, however, a judgment for the other party will be reversed.[86]

Although it has been held that a judgment in favor of respondent cannot be sustained where respondent has not sustained the burden of proof resting on him,[86.5] when there is a finding in favor of plaintiff, or the party having the burden of proof, the appellate court is not concerned with whether or not the burden has been sustained,[87] and will reverse only if there is no evidence to support the claim or some essential element thereof.[88] Even where the party having the burden of proof offers no evidence, a finding in such party's favor will be sustained if supported by substantial evidence offered by the other party.[88.5] Where there is some evidence to support the judgment rendered, the question of the burden of proof becomes immaterial for purposes of appeal.[88.10]

A finding in favor of the party having the burden of proof, based upon evidence of a substantial character from which different inferences of equal probability can be drawn, will be sustained notwithstanding the rule that, where two inferences of equal probability may be drawn from the evidence, the party on whom rests the burden of proof must fail;[89] but if even the evidence most favorable to plaintiff fails to show a cause of action, a finding in his favor will be set aside.[90]

Finding that fact does not exist or is not proved. A finding that a certain fact does not exist or is not proved cannot be disturbed if there is no evidence in the record to show its existence,[91] or the appellate court cannot hold as a matter of law that the uncontroverted evidence conclusively establishes the existence of the fact,[92] and, as shown infra § 1657, if the evidence is conflicting, a finding that a fact does not exist will not be disturbed.

a. In general
b. Nature and sufficiency of conflict

a. In General

Fact findings of the trial court are accorded great weight, and are almost universally regarded as binding

Undisputed evidence in support of every essential to the cause of action is necessary.

"Credible" defined

Appellate court, on examination of conflicting testimony in order to determine whether there is credible evidence to support findings of lower court, should bear in mind that the word "credible" under common law means competent and worthy of belief.

Even under statutes or rules of court, where appellate courts are not bound by the findings of the trial court generally, as discussed supra § 1656(1), or are empowered or required to make their own independent findings of fact, as discussed infra § 1845, findings of fact by the trial court are of assistance to the appellate court in reviewing a decision, particularly where the evidence is conflicting;[5.5] and the appellate court will usually defer to findings based on conflicting evidence,[5.10] at least where they are supported by the evidence.[5.15]

Apparently, the underlying reason for deferring to, according great weight to, and not disturbing, fact findings based on conflicting evidence is that the resolving of the conflict one way or another is primarily within the province of the trial court in that such problem directly involves the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, which, as already discussed in § 1656(2) are matters with which the appellate court will ordinarily not concern itself, because the trial court is in a much better position to pass on them.[6]

the conflict has been resolved the same way in two or more trials,[7] the decision of the trial judge is affirmed by the court en banc,[7.5] most of the witnesses, including the parties themselves, are foreigners who expressed themselves with such difficulty that the record is in apparent confusion,[8] the conflicting evidence is more or less evenly balanced,[9] or the findings are sustained by the preponderance of the evidence,[10] or corroborated by circumstances.[11]

Although a refusal or failure to make particular findings cannot be considered erroneous where the evidence in point is conflicting,[11.5] a finding on such evidence that a certain fact does not exist is equally as binding as a finding of the existence of a fact.[12]

Notwithstanding a conflict in the evidence, the findings will not be considered conclusive if they do not have the support of sufficient evidence,[13] could not reasonably have been made no matter what credibility was given to the various parts of the evidence,[14] are in conflict with admissions in appellee's pleadings,[15] are entirely foreign to the issues made by the pleadings,[16] or are clearly wrong or erroneous,[17] or the result of mistake,[18] are contrary to the legal effect of the evidence,[19] or are due to, or colored by, an error or misconception of law[20] or passion or prejudice on the part of the trial court.[21] It has also been held that, if in two cases involving the same occurrence different courts have reached opposite conclusions on substantially the same evidence, the general rule as to the conclusive effect of the findings of the trial court on conflicting evidence is inapplicable.[22]

Findings must actually be based on conflicting evidence. If, in making its findings, the trial court disregards conflicting testimony on which the decision could have been based, and bases its decision on undisputed facts, the rule discussed in § 1656(8) applies and the findings do not have the weight ordinarily accorded findings based on conflicting testimony.[23]

b. Nature and Sufficiency of Conflict

The conflict in the evidence must be a substantial one in order to have findings considered binding, but it need not necessarily be between the testimony of the witnesses for the respective parties.

There must be a material question or dispute concerning the evidentiary facts to have a conflict which will prevent the facts from being reviewed,[24] and such conflict must be substantial and real, not fanciful or fictitious.[25] The evidence to create a substantial conflict must be such as to present a fair and reasonable ground for a difference of opinion;[26] it is not enough that there is a mere scintilla of evidence which only furnishes ground for suspicion or conjecture that the facts are the other way.[27]

A sufficient conflict may be created by a presumption or inference on one side and direct testimony on the other;[28] and a finding resulting from the weighing of conflicting presumptions from admitted facts is as conclusive as one arising from conflicting testimony.[29] If, however, the admitted circumstances show without question that the facts are a certain way, a mere statement of one of the litigants that the facts are otherwise does not create a bona fide conflict in the testimony,[30]

When there is direct, positive testimony of a fact, no substantial conflict is raised within the meaning of the rule by reason of contrary evidence consisting solely of the opinions and conclusions of expert witnesses,[31] particularly if they are based on an incorrect or faulty hypothetical case.[32] Ordinarily, however, conflicting expert or opinion testimony presents a question of fact to be determined by the trial court,[32.5] and the rule that findings of a trial court based on conflicting testimony will not be disturbed on appeal applies to cases where the conflict in the evidence is between expert or opinion evidence as well as to direct evidence.[32.10] Thus, findings based on conflicting opinions of expert witnesses may be considered final where the expert testimony is the only evidence,[33] or there is some direct evidence on both sides.[34]

The rule prohibiting the review of findings based on conflicting evidence applies where the conflict is between witnesses for the same party as well as between witnesses for the respective parties.[35] Indeed, there are some cases which even appear to hold that the conflict does not have to be between different witnesses but may be found in different parts of the testimony of the same witness;[36] but there is other authority to the effect that under such circumstances there is not a sufficient conflict to make the findings conclusive.[37]

§ 1658. Against Weight of Evidence

Unless a statute provides otherwise, the appellate court will not weigh the evidence in passing on fact findings of the trial court, and will not disturb the findings unless they are manifestly against the preponderance of the evidence.

(2) However, it has been held that it is the appellate court's duty to weigh the evidence.

Ill.—Talmage v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 43 N.E.2d 575, 315 Ill. App. 623—Feucht v. Clarke, 20 N.E.2d 312, 299 Ill.App. 477.

Affirmative and negative findings

Reviewing court may set aside an affirmative finding because of absence of evidence to support it, but a negative finding is seldom set aside if evidence is limited in quantity and its weight and credibility may be questionable or if evidence may be regarded as unreliable.

as where, if the case had been tried by a jury, it would have been the duty of the court to direct a verdict for the opposite party.[49]

In determining whether findings are so against the weight of the evidence that they must be disturbed, the appellate court will always give regard to the advantages of the trial court for determining the weight of the evidence, by reason of its having seen and heard the witnesses;[50] and the mere fact that the trial court has made its findings against the testimony of the greater number of witnesses will not cause them to be considered against the overwhelming weight of the evidence.[51]

§ 1659. Amount of Recovery

Ordinarily, findings of the trial court as to the damages recoverable are entitled to great weight and will not be disturbed on appeal if it is not shown that there was an abuse of discretion, passion, prejudice, or use of the wrong measure of damages, or if it is not shown that the award is clearly wrong, shocks the sense of justice, could not reasonably have been made, or was excessive.

In accordance with the rules stated supra §§ 1656 (1)–1658, the value or amount of damages in a case tried without a jury is for the determination of the trial court,[51.50] and findings of the trial court as to the damages recoverable are, like the verdict of a jury, entitled to great weight.[52]

In the absence of special circumstances or apparent oversight,[52.5] and in the absence of an abuse of discretion,[53] such findings will ordinarily not be disturbed by the reviewing court[54] if it is possible to uphold them on any sound theory,[54.5] and if it is evidence on which the court based the amount of recovery,[63] or where the finding is within the limits or range of the evidence.[64]

Although the fixing of the damages is a matter of calculation or computation, the findings thereon will not be disturbed if it is not shown that the computation of the trial court was incorrect,[65] or the data for the calculation as found in the evidence are somewhat uncertain and unreliable.[66]

An award of damages will not be sustained by the appellate court, however, if it is for a larger amount than claimed in the petition,[67] so excessive as to show a failure to exercise a sound discretion,[68] inadequate,[69] obviously unsupported by competent[69.5] evidence,[70] or wrong on any hypothesis;[71] but the findings will not be disturbed merely because the appellate court would itself have reached a different result had it been making the allowance, and thinks the award made by the trial court somewhat excessive[72] or insufficient.[72.5]

Punitive damages. The allowance of punitive damages is largely within the discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed except in the case of abuse;[72.10] and it has been stated that a refusal of the trial judge to allow punitive damages is not reviewable on appeal because such damages are not given to the party as a matter of right but are awarded to protect the public against the repetition of similar offenses.[73]

Damages in personal injury actions. Findings of the trial court as to the amount of damages in personal injury actions will be given great weight,[73.5] and will not be disturbed because of excessiveness if it does not clearly appear that the trial court unreasonably exercised its discretion and awarded damages so excessive as to be unreasonable and amount to an injustice,[74] or that the award is so grossly disproportionate to any reasonable limit of compensation warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice[75] or to justify the view that the award was given under the influence of passion or prejudice.[75.5]

Attorney's services. It is sometimes held that it is within the power of the appellate court to make an independent appraisal and adjudication as to the reasonable value of attorney's services which have been passed on by the trial court.[76] Generally, however, such a determination is within the discretion of the trial court, and will not be disturbed in the absence of abuse.[76.5] The appellate court will give weight to the opinion of the trial judge as a lawyer;[76.10] and if there is evidence to support the allowance by the trial court of attorney's fees, it will usually not be disturbed,[77] at least where no contradictory testimony is offered,[77.5] and the allowance is not manifestly against the weight of the evidence.[77.10] It has been stated that the trial court has a better opportunity to determine the value of such services;[78] and before the appellate court can reverse a finding that a charge for attorney's services is reasonable it must appear from the record that the charge is grossly out of proportion to the service rendered and that there is no reasonable basis for the finding of the trial court.[79]

§ 1660. Where Evidence Is Documentary

Generally, although there is authority to the contrary, the appellate court is not bound by findings of the trial court based on evidence which is entirely or largely documentary, including findings based on affidavits, depositions, or transcripts of testimony; but where, in addition to the documentary evidence, some oral evidence affords a partial basis for the findings, they are usually accorded binding effect.

It is often held that the appellate court is not bound by the trial court's findings but may make an original examination of the evidence as contained in the record and make an independent decision on the factual questions where the evidence on which the findings of the trial court are based is entirely or largely documentary,[80] or the testimony of witnesses, which instead of being given orally with the witness before the court, has been reduced to, and presented to the court in the form of, a written statement or record,[81] such as an affidavit,[82] deposition,[83]

or report or transcript of testimony previously given;[84] and this is so although no declarations of law were asked and given or refused.[85]

The reasons given for this rule are that under such circumstances the appellate court is in just as good a position as the trial court to form a just estimate of the credence to be given to the testimony,[86] and also has more time to give to an examination of the case.[87]

As already noted in § 1656 (1), however, the fact that the trial court is in a superior position to pass on the weight and credibility of the evidence is but one of the underlying reasons for the general rule giving a binding effect on appeal to the trial court's fact findings. While this reason becomes largely nonexistent where the evidence is documentary or in writing, the other reason, that of the fundamental distinction between the functions of the trial and appellate courts, still remains. Giving to this latter reason its logical result,[88] there are a number of cases which hold that the weight of documentary or written evidence is a matter for the trial court,[89] and that, although all of the evidence is documentary or written, the findings of the trial court will be given the same weight as if the evidence were oral and not disturbed unless without support or plainly wrong.[90]

When in addition to the documentary or written evidence there is also some oral evidence which enters into the trial court's consideration or affords a partial basis for the findings, it is usually held that the findings are to be accorded their usual binding effect,[91] at least where a substantial portion of the evidence on the issue is oral and the evidence on the whole as to such issue is conflicting.[91.5] It has been indicated, however, that if the testimony is partly oral and partly by deposition, the appellate court may weigh and pass on the deposition evidence,[92] and there is even authority to the effect that where the testimony is partly written and partly oral, it is open to the appellate court to weigh the entire evidence.[93]

Conflicting affidavits or depositions. Apparently no matter which of the different views as to the effect of documentary or written evidence is taken, the findings will not be disturbed unless manifestly wrong where they are based on conflicting affidavits[94] or depositions.[95]

The interpretation and effect of documentary evidence are for the trial court in the first instance;[96]

to explain the meaning.[98]

Since the interpretation of a written instrument presents a question of law, however, a reviewing court is not bound by the conclusion of the trial court.[98.5] Thus, the appellate court is not bound by the trial court's construction of unambiguous language of a written document,[99] or by the construction of a written instrument based solely on the terms of the instrument,[99.5] where no extrinsic evidence was introduced on the issue of its proper construction,[99.10] or where the evidence is without conflict and not susceptible of conflicting inferences;[99.15] and if a finding is in conflict with an express

Determination not undertaken on appeal independent of evidence

In action to cancel a deed for nondelivery by grantor during his lifetime, appellate court on review should not undertake to determine maker's intention independent of evidence except where intention is not in doubt from full contents of the instrument itself.

provision of a written agreement of the parties, which is the controlling fact in the case, the finding will be disregarded by the appellate court.[1] Although an agreement is unambiguous, if the trial court has interpreted it in accordance with the meaning placed upon it by the parties, the findings will not be disturbed.[2]

Notwithstanding the meaning and contents of an instrument or document as presented in evidence are clear, if the question presented is whether or not certain words were in the instrument at the time it was signed, and as to this there is conflicting oral evidence, the trial court's finding on the question is as conclusive and binding as any other finding on conflicting evidence.[3] On the other hand, the trial court's finding on the issue whether uncertainty or ambiguity exists in a contract is not binding on appeal.[3.5]

§ 1661. Case Tried on Agreed Statement of Facts

The appellate court will consider the finding of a trial court based on an agreed statement of ultimate facts as if trying the case originally in order to determine whether the facts warranted the judgment.

The finding of the trial court in a case submitted to it on an agreed statement of ultimate facts presents a question of law, and the appellate court, having the same means as the trial court had of reaching a correct conclusion of law on the facts, will consider it as if trying the case originally in order to determine whether the facts warranted the judgment.[4] The holding of the trial court will be sustained if the evidential facts agreed on support the judgment,[5] or reasonable minds might well differ in the conclusions reached under the agreed statement,[6] although documentary evidence involved indicates the facts to be otherwise than as stipulated.[7] On the other hand, if the facts are insufficient to sustain the judgment or there is a lack of clearness and certainty on the material points, the judgment will not be permitted to stand.[8]

§ 1662. In Equity

In many jurisdictions an appeal in equity brings the facts before the appellate court for a trial de novo, so that the court is not bound by the fact findings of the chancellor, but has the right to review and weigh the evidence and find the facts for itself, but in some other jurisdictions the fact findings of a chancellor or trial judge in an equity case have the same effect as findings in a law action.

In many jurisdictions, except where the scope of the appeal has been limited by stipulation of the parties,[9] or the point on which the appeal is taken,[10] an appeal in equity brings the facts before the appellate court for a trial de novo so that it is in no way concluded or bound by the fact findings of the chancellor trying the case, but has the right and duty to review and weigh all the evidence in the case

Power to investigate and analyze evidence

(1) The appellate court on an appeal in an equity case has complete power to ascertain by full investigation and analysis of the evidence what the facts are, and whether the general finding is consistent therewith.

Ky.—Schlachter v. Henderson's Adm'r, 83 S.W.2d 491, 259 Ky. 759.

N.J.—De Donis v. De Donis, 61 A.2d 729, 1 N.J. 43.

4 C.J. p 898 note 91.

(2) The court has power to ascertain whether the findings are against the weight or preponderance of the evidence.

Okl.—Hawkins v. Boynton Land, Mining & Investment Co., 157 P. 753, 59 Okl. 30.

(3) The appellate court is in as good position as the chancellor to arrive at a conclusion by means of a comparison of signatures.

Ill.—Nolan v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 61 N.E.2d 876, 326 Ill.App. 328.

Ultimate responsibility for finding the facts in an equity case rests on the appellate court.

Mo.—Whiles v. Graves, 252 S.W. 943.

Scope of review

(1) In equity, the scope of review of findings of fact is broad.

Mich.—Goldberg v. Cities Service Oil Co., 266 N.W. 321, 275 Mich. 199.

(2) Attendant circumstances may properly be considered in determining the correctness of the chancellor's fact findings.

Ark.—Bryant ✝. Edgmon, 90 S.W.2d 994, 192 Ark. 20.

(3) While the supreme court may review findings of fact in an action for injunction, it will not, where no special findings are set out in the case, reverse what were apparently the judge's findings necessary to sustain his judgment unless such findings are clearly wrong.

N.C.—Davenport v. Board of Education of McDowell County, 112 S.E. 246, 183 N.C. 570.

Attorney fees

Where no question of veracity is involved on appeal from judgment for attorney fees in an allegedly inadequate amount in will construction case, appellate court reaches its own conclusion as to adequacy of attorney fees on the whole record.

Mo.—Stamm v. Desnoyers, App., 263 S.W.2d 45.

Findings of single justice

Where there is no reference the findings and decree of presiding judge, acting in the capacity of a master, should be reviewed by supreme court on the same theories which obtain when presiding judge in court of equity reviews the report of the register.

ings, they are manifestly against the great weight of | the evidence, or are clearly wrong or erroneous.[12]

Ala.—Stanley v. Beck, 7 So.2d 276, 242 Ala. 574.

Statutory provision

Statute providing that in equity cases the supreme court shall review all questions of fact presented in the record as well as questions of law is valid and constitutional, and is binding on the courts and litigants.

Mont.—Bond v. Birk, 247 P.2d 199, 126 Mont. 250.

Immaterial findings disregarded

On appeal in an equitable action, where master has heard evidence, appellate court need not consider immaterial findings and conclusions.

Ill.—Agatucci v. Corradi, 63 N.E.2d 630, 327 Ill.App. 153.

Facts undisputed

Whether equitable defenses converted action into a case in equity was immaterial, where facts were undisputed and only questions of law were presented on appeal.

Incompetency

Trial court's finding that a person was not incompetent in a legal sense was conclusive of such issue.

Idaho.—Graves v. Cupic, 272 P.2d 1020, 75 Idaho 451.

Finding not directly attacked

Finding of trial judge made in quiet title suit was required to be accepted on appeal where finding was not directly attacked.

Findings taken at full value

In equity suit tried without jury, all findings of fact by trial court must be taken at their full value in support of judgment.

Cal.—Bodkin v. Silveira, 120 P.2d 910, 49 C.A.2d 1.

Incorrect assumption of facts

Where appeal raises questions either on assumption of facts which do not appear in findings or by way of saying that chancellor should have found certain facts, appellate court will ordinarily affirm decree, because questions were not properly before it, and direct dismissal.

Vt.—Smith v. White's Estate, 188 A. 901, 108 Vt. 473.

Appellate court cannot supplement court's findings although the evidence may be before the appellate court.

Vt.—Tuttle v. Tuttle, 23 A.2d 523, 112 Vt. 271.

On appeal from decree dismissing bill in equity, wherein defendant offered no testimony, question was whether plaintiff made out a prima facie case.

Pa.—Overbeck v. McHale, 47 A.2d 142, 354 Pa. 177.

Where the trial on appeal is de novo, the findings of the chancellor in an equity action do not ordinarily have the full effect of a jury verdict,[13] unless the issue or action is in actuality a legal one, properly triable by a jury, but which has been submitted to the chancellor for trial instead,[14] or unless no exceptions were taken to the findings, and the statement of the case states that it does not contain all the evidence relating to such findings.[14.5] Many cases can be found however, in which it has been said that the fact findings of a chancellor in an equity suit have, on appeal, the same force and effect as a jury verdict, particularly in jurisdictions where the court's findings in equity are regarded the same as at law,[15] or where the findings are based on

Evidence not weighed

In suit for injunctive relief and damages because of discharge of surface water on the complainant's golf course, where final decree was for complainant although specific relief granted was ineffectual because defendant had disposed of its property pending the cause, appellate court need not weigh evidence to determine whether defendant violated complainant's rights and inflicted damage that justified injunctive relief.

Common-law judgment

Where evidence in equity suit is taken ore tenus before chancellor, his decree has weight of common-law judgment in case heard without intervention of jury.

Va.—Collins v. Collins, 32 S.E.2d 657, 183 Va. 408—Taylor v. Taylor, 29 S.E.2d 833, 182 Va. 602.

17. Mo.—Stumpe v. City of Washington, App., 54 S.W.2d 731.

Conclusions of witnesses

Under statute relating to consideration of evidence in equity, testimony consisting merely of conclusions of witness must be disregarded on appeal from decree dismissing bill in equity.

Ala.—Cook v. Parker, 27 So.2d 779, 248 Ala. 393.

Evidence not considered

On appeal by plaintiff in an action on an account involving question of whether defendant purchased items in controversy personally, where appellate court was reviewing case as one in equity, the court would refuse to consider defendant's testimony that he did not purchase the items personally in determining the issue.

ever, where evidence, in order to prevail, must be clear, precise, and indubitable, or where it must meet some other prescribed standard of proof;[18.15] and the question whether evidence relied on by the successful party in the court below and accepted by the chancellor is legally sufficient to establish fraud is one of law which may be reviewed by the appellate court.[18.20]

Where the findings of the chancellor are reversed by the court in banc, and reasons are given for this action, it becomes the duty of an appellate court fully and carefully to examine them, together with the entire record, and determine whether the action of the court in banc is justified, keeping in mind the weight to which the original findings are entitled and the reasons for their overthrow.[18.25]

§ 1663. —— Review with Deference to Findings of Chancellor

Although the fact findings of a trial court in an equity suit may not be conclusive on appeal, they will never be lightly disturbed, because of the difficulties encountered by the appellate court in getting at the true facts and the superior position or advantage of the trial court in this respect.

Although the fact findings of a trial judge in an equity suit may not be conclusive on appeal, yet a presumption exists in favor of their correctness,[19] and they will never be lightly disturbed.[20] The appellate court in sifting and weighing the whole evidence and making its own determination of the facts in accordance therewith will do so with deference to the findings of the lower court which are often regarded as persuasive and accorded much consideration and weight;[21] and the determination of fac-

Change in findings

If the chancellor who originally made the findings sits with the court in banc and joins in changing the findings, they, as changed, are regarded as the final conclusion of the chancellor and entitled to the same conclusive effect as unchanged findings.

Chancellor's findings accepted

If, on examination of the record, supreme court reached the conclusion that action of the court en banc in sustaining exceptions to findings of chancellor was unjustifiable, supreme court would be bound to accept the facts as found by the chancellor rather than as found by the full court.

tual questions is often regarded as within the province of the chancellor, at least in the first instance.[22]

The rule of deference is to a great extent but a rule of necessity or convenience invoked because of the difficulties encountered by the appellate court in getting at the true facts and the superior position or advantage of the trial court in this respect.[23] This is clearly shown by the fact that the terminology sometimes used to express the rule of deference is that the appellate court in determining the facts will

Construction of will

Where both complainant and defendant by cross complaint sought specific construction of will and asserted rights dependent on such construction and no collateral facts were alleged to shed light on testator's intention, appellate court would not question propriety of trial court's action in construing will on demurrer to cross complaint.

24.5 Determined by appellate court itself

The weight to be given to the findings of fact or to the decree rendered on facts adduced in evidence in trial court, as shown by the record on appeal, is for the appellate court to determine for itself within the judicial powers and jurisdiction conferred by the constitution.

Limitations on rule

(1) The fact that the chancellor heard and saw the witnesses will not be given any weight if it cannot be oral,[26] or oral and conflicting.[27] In accordance with | the general rule, the findings will not be lightly in-determined whether the chancellor based his conclusion on the weight of the evidence or an erroneous view that certain of appellant's evidence was incompetent.

Or.—Gress v. Wessinger, 172 P. 495, 88 Or. 625.

(2) Nor does the rule against disturbing findings on oral testimony apply where the judge disbelieved all the witnesses who testified on the point.

Mass.—Rubenstein v. Lottow, 107 N. E. 718, 220 Mass. 156.

Sufficiency to support findings

The appellate court will not weigh the evidence if there is sufficient to support the findings, and the evidence consists of the oral testimony of witnesses delivered at the trial.

Exception to rule that appellate court shall weigh evidence

Notwithstanding statutory provisions that on a chancery appeal the supreme court shall weigh the evidence giving no weight to the chancellor's decision, it has been held that the chancellor's decision is to be given the weight of a jury verdict and not disturbed unless plainly wrong where the evidence is oral and the chancellor had the advantage of seeing the witnesses.
